ROOSEVELT GROUP FOR LICENSING OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Committee Also Recommends to Congress That Federal Administrator Be Placed in Charge.

PAST PRACTICES ARE DENOUNCED

Another Report Urges Unified Telegraph System With Regulation Under U. S. Agency.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A Federal curb on stock market speculation and a unified telegraph system for the nation were recommended by presidential committees today in communications sent to Congress.

Strict regulation of stock exchanges through a license system and a Federal administrative authority was urged. For communications a Federal agency was recommended in addition to unification.

There were some expressions of doubt as to the immediate fate of the recommendations. Speaker Rainey said they were not in the emergency category and probably would not be acted on at this session. President Roosevelt said a few days ago that after the proper committees at the Capitol had studied the measures, he would talk the matter over with them and that action was expected at this Congress.

In dealing with stock exchanges, the report recommended creation of an administrative authority with "broad discretionary powers" to require the exchanges to adopt rules and regulations for "fair dealing." Legislation to require corporations engaging in interstate commerce to secure Federal incorporation also was suggested as an effective way to deal with some of the "evils connected with manipulation of stocks."

Past Practices Denounced.

Some of the practices disclosed by the Senate stock market investigating committee were denounced.

"Your committee regards certain of the disclosures before the subcommittee of the Senate committee on banking and currency during the past year and a half as imposing an imperative obligation to devise constructive measures for the prevention of those practices which have shocked the conscience of the nation," the report said.

"There has been revealed the spectacle of certain leaders in the world of finance who, while standing in a fiduciary relation to the stockholders as directors in corporations, have engaged in stock market transactions which would not but rebound to the ultimate disadvantage of the shareholders."

Chairman Fletcher of the Senate committee which has been conducting the two-year inquiry into stock market practices said his committee would not submit any legislation to the Senate until it has completed its inquiry, probably next month. He expressed himself in agreement with the chief recommendations of the committee.

The report did not carry recommendations for dealing with commodity exchanges. The report said J. W. T. Duvel, chief of the Grain Futures Administration, and Nils A. Olsen, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics,, had prepared bills for the regulation of commodity exchanges from two different angles. These proposals, the report said, "should be harmonized so that two inconsistent proposals will not be placed before Congress at the same time."

Report on Communications.

Regarding communications, the committee that handled that subject pointed out that regulatory powers now are vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission but the memorandum said that agency was burdened with the responsibilities of railroad supervision. The new agency it suggested would be an independent commission or a bureau of an existing executive department.

Federal supervision, in the committee's opinion, would reduce rates by "regulating profits and overhead expenses and intercompany charges." Other prospective benefits which the memorandum recited included prevention of "discrimination," control of exclusive contracts with foreign nations and corporations, regulation of depreciation charges, prevention of "speculative management" and the "watering"

Artists Paid by CWA Painting Murals in City Hospitals and 3 Schools

31 in St. Louis Have Received $5400 From Government for Six Weeks' Work, Director La Beaume Reports.

Artists painting murals and frescoes on walls of public buildings from which the dust of years has been scraped and others with inspired brush producing paintings on canvas, as a result of President Roosevelt's recognition of painting as a profession, mean a renaissance of American art, directors of CWA art work here believe.

A fresco is being done at City Hospital chapel by painters who are portraying the sermon on the mount and Biblical pastoral scenes. A mural is partly finished at one public school and sketches are being prepared for murals in two others. In four city institutions frescoes and murals are planned and the entrances of City Hall are to be painted with historical and symbolic frescoes.

Louis La Beaume, president of the board of control of the City Art Museum, who has charge of the CWA art work in Missouri and three other states, said of the program: "Some people will believe it is a waste of money, but it has encouraged artists to continue, most of whom have been without employment and unable to dispose of their paintings. It has encouraged the young artist to develop himself, and I believe it will bring about a renaissance in American art. If only one genius is developed, it's been worth while. The employment of arists is justified also for economic reasons."

Nuderscher in Charge.

Work at the schools is being done under the directinon of La Beaume in co-operation with the Board of Education. At City Hospital, City Sanitarium, City Infirmary, Isolation Hospital, Koch Hospital and St. Louis Training School, work is under the direction of Frank Nuderscher, artist. Director of Public Safety Chadsey has charge of City Hall work.

Nuderscher commented on the lack of decorative art in public buildings and said he expected the CWA program would "give locals artist an opportunity they never had before." He pointed out that it was the first time "art has been recognized by the United States Government as a profession." He emphasized artists paint best the subjects with which they are most familiar all their lives, and he anticipates some fine work by St. Louis artists.

"In England," he said, "they would not consider hiring an artist from Germany to do a public building mural. I am for American art and work done by Americans. Let us give the local talent a chance. The CWA opportunity will develop good art."

$5400 to St. Louisans.

Bearing out the ideas of La Beaume and Nuderscher, a young artist, Sol Solnodel, 5835 Bartmer avenue, has painted for his CWA work a picture called "The Renaissance." It portrays the awakening of the American artist under the impetus of the CWA program.

The painting shows an artist with brush and pallet in his hand being awakened by a figure representing the Government. In a bright light which envelopes the central figure is seen a spiritual conception of a great master of art. Solnodel, who is 21 years old, formerly attended Washington University Art School and has exhibited work at the Art Museum and Artist's Guild.

LaBeaume now has 31 artists employed in St. Louis, including seven women, and 150 in the four states. They receive $27.50 and $42.50 a week, according to their experience, less a 10 per cent reduction, effective this week. In six weeks, about $27,000 in salaries has been paid in the district under his direction and about $5400 in St. Louis.

Miss Loeffler's Murals.

Nuderscher has eight decorators at work, including one helper. They are paid $1.50 an hour as provided by the CWA scale for that type of work, limited to a 24-hour week. About $4000 in salaries has been paid at the city institutions.

At City Hospital, the entrance also will be decorated, and the children's room will be painted with figures of children, small animals, birds, trees and flowers. At the infirmary and sanitarium, new stage scenery will be painted besides interior decorations. At Koch Hospital, the entrance hall, library and other rooms will be decorated with frescoes and murals. Plans have not been completed for the training school and Isolation Hospital. Nuderscher is designing all the institutional work.

Miss Gisella Loeffler is painting the walls of the Elias Michael School dining room in fantastic fairy tales scenes and woodland scenes.

Paintings at Benton and Gundlach Schools will be done by Dooley Dionysius and Miss Lillian Thoele, who are preparing their designs.

GREECE EXPECTED TO GRANT INSULL 10-DAY EXTENSION

Minister of Interior Willing to Delay Ouster If Health Is Shown to Be Bad.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ATHENS, Jan. 27.—Greece is expected to grant Samuel Insull a 10-day extension of his resident permit because of his ill health, it was learned today in quarters close to the Ministry of Interior.

Insull, twice successful in evading extradition, has been ordered out of the country by Wednesday as an undesirable alien, thus again becoming liable to arrest and deportation to the United States for trial on fraud and larceny indictments.

Christos Ladas, Greek attorney for the former Chicago millionaire, will present a petition to the Government Monday for a 30-day extension of Insull's residence permit, but it is thought the Government will grant an extension only until Feb. 10.

It is understood the Minister of Interior will agree to the 10-day extension only if proof is submitted that Insull's health prohibits his traveling to another country. According to Dr. Voilas, his personal physician, Insull is in danger of a stroke because of his weak heart and diabetic condition, and cannot be moved from his room without jeopardizing his life.

ASKS THAT NEGRO MINISTER OPEN HOUSE WITH PRAYER

Congressman Adds This to Request Negroes Be Permitted to Eat at House Restaurant.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Representative De Priest (Rep.), Illinois, has added a request that a Negro minister be permitted to give the opening prayer at a House session to his demand that Negroes be permitted to eat in the House restaurant.

Speaker Rainey told newsmen today he had left De Priest's request "up to the House chaplain." The Rev. James Shea Montgomery, chaplain, said he had "deferred the matter."

The House will take up a resolution by De Priest for an investigation of the authority of the House Accounts Committee to bar Negroes from the restaurant. Republican leaders have agreed to support that resolution.

STREET FIGHTING IN PARIS AFTER CABINET QUITS

Monarchists Charge Police, Flares Thrown at Mounted Officers, Firemen Turn Hose on Crowd.

CAFE GROUP BREAKS CHAIRS ON HEADS

Chautemps Gives Up Effort to Defend Self in Pawnshop Scandal — Herriot May Be Successor.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—The center of Paris was a scene of wild turmoil tonight as royalists rioted against thousands of massed police.

Elaborate precautions had been taken against a repetition of earlier anti-Government demonstrations, but the monarchists, shouting invective and swinging chairs, repeatedly charged through lines of mounted and foot officers.

The hours-long fight followed the resignation of Premier Camille Chautemps' cabinet, against whose alleged part in the $40,000,000 Stavisky pawnshop scandal the royalists have frequently demonstrated in recent weeks.

"Down with Chautemps!" was the rallying cry of hundreds of rioters who time and again smashed into the ranks of authorities wielding any weapon that came to hand.

Ranks of the bluecoats were broken as groups of 50 to 100 men struggled throughout the spacious place De L'Opera and near the Cafe de la Paix. Magnesium flares were thrown at the mounted officers, whose horses, panic-stricken, reared and plunged.

Firemen Aid Police.

Every available policeman was on duty. Firemen and guards aided in the struggle. Three blocks of helmeted policemen were stationed around the place.

At the Cafe de la Paix the monarchists seized chairs and smashed them on the heads of the police. Mounted policemen rode again and again into the mob but the battles were quieted only temporarily, to be resumed more fiercely in a nearby quarter.

Authorities smashed right and left with clubs. Firemen attached their hoses inside the opera while police guarded them from attacks. Then streams of water were poured on the throng.

Streets leading to the place were barricaded with big police busses and patrol wagons, but the Royalists smashed into them successfully. Chautemps, harried in the Chamber of Deputies' debates over the pawnshop collapse and embarrassed by the riots over charges of financial corruption, decided to throw up the sponge and let someone else, probably former Premier Edouard Herriot, try to calm the public tempest.

He wished "good luck to the man who takes this difficult job" upon leaving the Elysee Palace, where he submitted his ministry's resignation to President Lebrun.

A Victory for Voices in Street.

The fall of the Chautemps Ministry marked the first time in recent years that voices in the street had caused a government to tumble.

One man stripped to his under garments, despite the cold, appeared near the historic opera house shouting "this is what ministers and taxes did to me." He was arrested.

The riots were said to have a twofold objective—celebration of Chautemps' resignation and a demonstration against "government of thieves" as royalists termed the retiring cabinet.

Excitement in the central streets of Paris continued long past midnight. The flaming wreckage of newspaper kiosks, catching fire from gas lamps, lighted the swarming boulevards where 2000 persons were fighting with the police.

Firemen, prepared to drench belligerent Royalists with hoses, were made helpless when demonstrators cut the lines.

Chinaware Hurled at Police.

A famous boulevard cafe was entered by the demonstrators, the tables sacked, saucers and other chinaware hurled at police who tried to stop the fracas. Autobusses were forcibly emptied of passengers and driven onto the sidewalks to serve, along with uprooted trees, as barricades.

Many were injured and wholesale arrests were made as the fighting continued.

NELSON EFFIGY FOUND TO BE BLIND IN WRONG EYE

Error Discovered on Figure Which Has Stood in Westminster Abbey 129 Years.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Lord Nelson's effigy in Westminster Abbey is blind in the wrong eye. The error has just been discovered by a visitor despite the fact the effigy has stood in the abbey 129 years and has been viewed annually by thousands.

The effigy represents Nelson as being blind in the left eye, when in realty he was blind in the right.

NEW YORK STRIKERS INVADE CAFE, ORDER PATRONS OUT

Nine Arrested After Creating Scene at Longchamps; 1400 Reported in Walkout.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Nine men were arrested tonight after striking hotel workers invaded the Longchamps restaurant in West Fifty-seventh street, ordered the patrons to leave, and harangued employes.

Those held allegedly were men who had joined the strike called last night by members of the Amalgamated Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union. They were charged with disorderly conduct on complaint of the restaurant manager.

Ten bus boys in the cafe had walked out shortly before the delegation arrived. The invaders shouted and created a general disturbance, the police were told, so that some diners abandoned their meals.

B. J. Field, union secretary, asserted that 30,000 employes of the city's principal hotels were on strike, but in the dining rooms and kitchens service was continuing promptly. Hotel officers said they could not estimate the number who had walked out, but unofficial checks placed it at 1400.

BECK SAYS AMERICAN PEOPLE 'DON'T CARE WHOOP' ANY MORE

Congressman Tells New York Bar They Lack Spirit of Days When Constitution Was Drawn.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Congressman James M. Beck (Rep.) Pennsylvania, told the New York State Bar Association today that the American people lack the spirit which existed when the Constitution was drawn.

"They don't care a whoop any more," he said. "Their Representatives, when the present emergency laws were passed, said that the safety of the republic is the supreme law. But there was no emergency so great as to create laws which are against the letter of the Constitution."

The greatest stroke against the Constitution, he said, was the passing of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

"Where is there any justification in an act," he asked, "which dictates to a tailor in Texas that he must charge the same for pressing his fellow man's pants that is charged by a tailor in New York? Where does that touch on interstate commerce?"

KIDNAPED ST. PAUL BANKER MISSING MORE THAN 10 DAYS

Family of Edward G. Bremer Lacks Final Instructions on Handing Over Money.

By the Associated Press.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 27.—The question of when Edward G. Bremer will return, remained unanswered today as the tenth day passed since the wealthy banker was kidnaped Jan. 17 for $200,000 ransom.

The Bremer family, anxious to pay for the freedom of the 37-year-old head of the Commercial State Bank, said they still lacked final instructions from the gang for handing over the money.

Adolph Bremer, father of the missing man, has given assurance he would keep secret any communication from the kidnapers to insure safety from police interference. The Bremer family is not co-operating with authorities, he said.

$1700 in Gold Left on Porch.

By the Associated Press.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 27. — A nocturnal visitor left $1700 in gold coin in a sack on the front porch of the home of Otto Reinig, Snoqualmie Postmaster, he told authorities today. There was no note with the gold to indicate ownership, he said. Reinig brought the gold to the Federal Reserve Bank here. Investigators believed it was left by some person who feared he would be prosecuted.

$950,000,000 MORE SOUGHT FOR CWA AND RELIEF

President Asks Congress to Continue Emergency Program With Division of Funds Not Specified.

WORK DEADLINE MAY BE EXTENDED

Meanwhile, Hopkins Orders All State Administrations to Make Records Available to the Public.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—President Roosevelt asked Congress today for $950,000,000 to continue the emergency relief program.

That was $100,000,000 more than the $500,000,000 for direct relief and $350,000,000 for Civil Works the President originally contemplated asking. His terse message to Speaker Rainey did not specify what division was contemplated.

Speculation as to whether the increased figure was Roosevelt's answer to the nation-wide cry against demobilization of the Civil Works army by May 1 at the latest brought a repetition at the White House of the President's statement that he still wants Civil Works employes transferred to Public Works and private industry's payrolls by late spring.

The President, by his message, however, would be free to continue the program beyond the deadline he wants, and Rainey said today that civil works would have to continue at least the rest of the fiscal year.

Text of President's Message.

The President's message:

"I have the honor to request an additional appropriation of $950,000,000 for the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933, and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration established by executive order No. 6420-B of Nov. 9, 1933, pursuant to the authority of title two of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933.

"Section 2-A of the Federal Emergency Relief Act made available for the purposes of that act $500,000,000 of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The executive order establishing the Federal Civil Works Administration made available for that administration $400,000,000 of the appropriation of $3,300,000,000 made by the Fourth Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1933, for national industrial recovery.

"The funds available for these two activities will be exhausted early in the month of February, 1934, and it is essential that additional funds be provided to avoid an abrupt termination of this relief work.

"I am confident that the Congress is in sympathy with the proposed continuance of these relief activities."

Records Open to Public.

Meanwhile, as a part of his intensive drive to keep civil works free from graft and politics, Harry L. Hopkins, the administrator, today ordered all state administrators to make their records available for public inspection.

"I want to make it perfectly clear that all civic works payrolls and records of purchase of supplies are public records and therefore open to inspection," Hopkins telegraphed to all state administrators.

The administrator's move followed by a day his order placing army engineers in charge of civil works in Chicago and Los Angeles. Charges of politics in CWA have come from Los Angeles, but no hints of such have reached here from Chicago.

Maj. Donald Connally took charge of civil works at Los Angeles and Lieutenant-Colonel Dan R. Sultan at Chicago.

The officers were lent to Hopkins by the War Department for the work and their salaries will be paid

CONVICTED IN BOND SCANDAL IN KANSAS

TOM B. BOYD.

EX-TREASURER BOYD OF KANSAS IS FOUND GUILTY

Convicted of Illegally Removing $260,600 of Bonds From State Vaults Last July.

By the Associated Press.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 27.—Tom B. Boyd, former State Treasurer, was convicted by a District Court jury today of illegally removing $260,600 of bonds from the State vaults last July.

Found guilty on two counts, he faces sentence of from two to five years in prison on each.

Judge Otis E. Hungate announced sentence would be deferred until Feb. 10. The defense gave notice a new trial would be sought.

The 46-year-old defendant, father of six children, showed no emotion as the verdict was read.

Boyd was charged with turning the bonds over to Ronald Finney, bond broker and market plunger, who perpetrated the million-dollar Kansas bogus bond scandal.

Results of the Expose.

Finney now is under sentence of from 31 to 635 years for bond forgery. His father, Warren W. Finney, Emporia banker, has been sentenced to prison for embezzlement. Three banks controlled by the Finneys were closed last year. The scandal resulted in impeachment charges against Attorney-General Roland Boynton and State Auditor Will J. French. The State Senate acquitted Boynton. French's trial will be resumed next week with a motion before the impeachment court to dismiss the charges.

Boyd did not take the witness stand, but his wife was called. She testified she and her husband had made a profit of $6000 in a market deal arranged by Ronald Finney last summer.

The bonds involved in the case had been placed in the Treasury as security for State money deposited in Finney banks at Emporia and Eureka.

The State contended that Boyd and Finney removed them to aid Finney when he was called for added collateral by his Chicago brokers.

What Inquiry Disclosed.

Although he remained silent at the trial, Boyd declared in a newspaper interview last year that Finney gave him a memorandum receipt and told him he proposed to take the bonds to Chicago, sell them and place the proceeds in the State Treasury to reduce the accounts of the Emporia and Eureka banks.

The money was not returned and the investigation directed by Gov. Alf M. Landon disclosed more than $400,000 of fake bonds in the Treasury.

Boyd was serving his third term as Treasurer when he resigned last October after his arrest.

VOTE 66 TO 23; WHEELER 16 TO 1 SILVER PLAN IS REJECTED, 45-43

GLASS, GORE, ONLY DEMOCRATS AGAINST

By CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—With only minor changes, the Senate late this afternoon passed the administration's gold seizure and dollar devaluation bill by vote of 66 to 23. No amendments were adopted that were not acceptable to the President.

On the final test only two Democrats failed to support the Administration. Glass of Virginia voted against the bill and Gore of Oklahoma was paired against it.

The bill was passed by the House last Saturday, in substantially the same form as that approved by the Senate, by a vote of 360 to 40.

Differences between the House and the Senate probably will be ironed out on Monday and the bill sent to the President for signature on Tuesday.

What Bill Provides.

The bill provides that, upon its approval, the title to all the gold stocks in the Federal Reserve System shall pass to the United States, which shall pay for the gold with certificates.

It further provides that, if and when the President revalues the dollar, under the powers he already enjoys under the Thomas amendment, the top limit of revaluation shall be 60 per cent.

This means that the President, by proclamation, within the period of three years fixed as the time limit of the act, may value the dollar at 50 or 60 cents, or any value between the two. Fifty cents is the lower limit set by the Thomas amendment.

The bill also further provides that, out of the "profit" accruing to the Government from devaluation, there shall be created a stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000, under the sole and secret control of the Secretary of the Treasury, for use in stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar and for other purposes, including the purchase and sale of United States Government bonds in domestic market operations.

Similar to British Fund.

An ineffectual effort was made in the Senate to restrict the use of the fund to dealings in foreign exchange. The fund is similar in amount and purpose to the British equalization fund, and, if there is not a prior stabilization agreement with the British, will be used in competition with it, in what some Senators referred to as a 'great international poker game."

Senator Glass declared that the bill would make of the Secretary of the Treasury "a one-man central bank" and for this view he received considerable support. The administration forces, however, were able to defeat an amendment that would have vested control over the stabilization fund in a board of five members.

Practically the only concession obtained by opponents of the bill was that limiting its operation, both as to the term of the stabilization fund and the revaluing power

PILSUDSKI IS NOT EXPECTED TO TAKE DICTATORSHIP NOW

Poland Speculating on Successor to President Moscicki as Result of Parliament's Action.

COL. SLAWECK IS MENTIONED

Opposition Deputies Planning to Censure Speaker for Calling for Surprise Vote on Reform.

WARSAW, Poland, Jan. 27.—Poland turned tonight to speculation as to who will succeed Ignace Moscicki as President, following approval by the Sejm (Legislature) of a Polish constitutional reform plan which will give the President dictatorial powers.

Moscicki, it was understood, accepted a second term in office last June only as a favor to Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, with the understanding that he should be free to retire when the new constitution became effective.

Pilsudski had declined to accept the presidency because he considered the executive powers too limited.

The Marshal, it is now believed, will not accept the presidency even now, his right hand man, Col. Wslery Slaweck, ex-Premier, being mentioned as a possible candidate instead.

Meanwhile the Government party organized a huge public meeting at Pilsudski Square, with streets gayly decorated, in celebration of the Sejm's approval of the reform plan.

Opposition deputies in the Sejm are planning to introduce a lack of confidence motion against the speaker of the Legislature, charging he violated both constitutional and Sejm regulations by calling for a surprise vote on the reform.

$950,000,000 MORE SOUGHT FOR CWA AND RELIEF

by that branch of the Government.

The Situation in Illinois.

The first repercussion from the move came today with receipt of a telegram from Robert J. Dunham, State Administrator for Illinois, tendering his resignation as Civil Works head. Dunham and the county committees had retained charge of emergency relief work.

Hopkins paid tribute to Dunham's work in Illinois and said he would not accept the resignation until he could talk with him by telephone. He said he wanted Dunham to remain on the job and that the outcome would depend on the conversation.

"Dunham," said Hopkins, "has given a lot of devoted service to this enterprise. That's all there is to say."

He later added, however, that "it seemed to the best interest of the Civil Works Administration to have Col. Sulton assigned to Cook County."

Politics in Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles situation has been a sore spot for weeks. Three administrators have resigned within six weeks. Harold English, the latest, quit after 10 days because, he said, political interference made the job undesirable. Dispatches from the southern California city said that Assistant State's Attorney W. F. Palmer had promised a full investigation of English's charges.

Meanwhile, the Justice Department and the Public Works Administration investigation division continued checking complaints of political favoritism and graft.

A bill directing that the Civil Works program be continued at its existing employment level until May 15, but that its rolls be "purged" of the less deserving and needy, will be introduced Monday by Representative Disney (Dem.), Oklahoma. Disney was at work today on the measure, and had not drafted its details.

$23,596,000 Polish Contract.

By the Associated Press.

WARSAW, Poland, Jan. 27.—The Polish Government today signed a contract with Westinghouse Brake and the Sargy Signal Co. of London for installation of railroad equipment, estimated to take five or six years' time. The work will cost 132,000,000 zlotys (approximately $23,596,000). Sixty per cent of the material and labor is to be Polish, according to the contract.

ADDISON THROOP SEEKS TO PLEAD NOT GUILTY

Wants to Withdraw Previous Plea Which, He Says Was Forced From Him.

Addison J. Throop, former chairman of the St. Clair County Board of Tax Review, filed a motion in Circuit Court at Belleville yesterday to withdraw his plea of guilty to a charge of conspiracy to solicit bribes, which he entered before Circuit Judge Joyce at Belleville, last Jan. 8.

Asserting he had been "threatened, weakened and intimidated" by State's Attorney L. P. Zerweck, Throop, who made a confession in the East Side tax graft to the Attorney General of Illinois last April and later waived immunity and testified before the grand jury, asked leave to substitute a plea of not guilty.

The motion was filed by Philip G. Listeman of East St. Louis, and identifies Listeman as Throop's attorney. At the time he pleaded guilty, the former chairman's attorney was Louis Beasley.

Alleging he was not informed on Jan. 8 that he was going to Belleville to plead guilty; and that he is not guilty and has a valid defense to each charge against him, the motion relates that Throop and Beasley went to Zerweck's office on Jan. 8.

It was there(the motion continues, that he "was threatened, weakened and intimated by said Zerweck and Beasley and that Zerweck said to this defendant that while he was charged with the crime of conspiracy, which was a misdemeanor and for which he might be fined, sentenced to jail or to the penitentiary or both fined and imprisoned; that if he failed to plead guilty he would be guilty of perjury which was a felony and that it would be his (Zerweck's) duty to see that he (Throop) was indicted for perjury by the grand jury that was at that moment being convened in the Circuit Court;

"That Louis Beasley, acting as attorney, agreed to the statements of Zerweck and created the impression in the mind of this defendant that unless he did plead guilty, he would be sent to the penitentiary because of testimony he had given before the grand jury and which, it was claimed, was perjured testimony;

"That the statements made by Zerweck and Beasley were not true in fact, were a misrepresentation of fact and the law and aroused in this defendant, fear that unless he did enter plea of guilty, though in fact he believes he is not guilty, he would be sent to the penitntiary because of perjury aforesaid."

Zerweck denied Throop had been threatened with prosecution for perjury or intimidated by himself or Beasley. He said no promises had been made to Throop.

"Throop's decision to plead guilty was voluntary," Zerweck said. "He repeatedly has said he would plead guilty since the charges were made against him. I intend to oppose the motion for changing Throop's plea and affidavits will be filed to show he was not intimidated. I'm going to fight his case to the finish."

Four others indicted with Throop on consuiracy charges are scheduled for trial Feb. 26. They are: Frank P. McKane, member of the Board of Review; Charles E. Melvin, member of the Board of Assessors; Arthur P. O'Leary, onetime chairman of the Board of Review, and Edward J. Delmore, vice-president and auditor of the Hunter Packing Co. Like Throop, they are at liberty under bonds of $10,000.

of stock, and the extension of service to new localities.

The report said the present law permitting merger of telephone companies should be broadened to include all communication enterprises. Competitive duplication of offices of the two principal companies, it was said, prevented proper service to smaller towns and villages. The majority of the committee expressed the belief that a premium was being paid to maintain this competition and that rates, with unification, could be lowered.

Lacks Greatest Efficiency.

Referring to the present setup as "a collection of communication agencies not working in accordance with any national plan," the memorandum asserted each company in the field lacked certain facilities necessary for greatest efficiency. In particularly referred to the Radio Corporation as "seriously handicapped" through lack of offices and being forced to depend on wire telegraph systems for picking up messages. A possible future unification of radio with wire and cable communication systems was mentioned when radio has "demonstrated its possibilities."

A communications advisory council, consisting of representatives of the private systems as well as various Government departments which have their own communications branches, was suggested. The committee said that all companies should be privately owned and operated, "at least for the present."

SOME LAWYERS CRIMINALS IN REALITY, SAYS CUMMINGS

Attorney-General Asserts Number Who Use Profession as Cloak "Startingly Large."

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Swift punishment for the "startling large" number of lawyers criminally linked with organized crime was urged today by Attorney-General Cummings.

He said that such lawyers "have not only misconceived their duties as advocates but have in effect actually participated in criminal activities. . . . The fact remains that these lawyers are actual criminals operating under the cloak of their calling."

The Attorney-General's views were expressed in an article prepared for the February issue of the American Bar Association Journal.

Three methods of dealing with the lawyers who are accomplices to crime were mentioned: criminal prosecution for law violations, contempt of court proceedings when justice is obstructed and its administration brought into disrepute by lawyers, and disbarment proceedings when there is a violation of duties incumbent upon a lawyer as a professional man and an officer of the court.

Cited as grounds for criminal action were: Violation of Federal statutes which cover attempts to influence witnesses and jurors illegally; receiving property stolen from the Government; advising illegal acts; concealing knowledge of felonies and conspiring to injure or threaten citizens.

Senate Passes Roosevelt Dollar Devaluation Bill

of the President, to three years. An amendment to this effect was not opposed by the administration.

Votes on Silver Plans.

In the closing stages of the debate, which was under a time limitation on speeches after 4 o'clock today, the Senate, by a narrow margin (45 to 43) voted down a silver-purchase amendment offered by Senator Wheeler (Dem.), Montana, and gave short shrift to an amendment by Robinson (Rep.), Indiana, that would have required the payment of the World War soldier bonus certificates out of the profits of dollar devaluation.

An amendment by Pittman (Dem.), Nevada, which Chairman Fletcher of the Banking Committee pronounced acceptable, was voted into the bill. This extends the optional powers over silver conferred on the President by the Thomas amendment of last April, and also permits him to reduce the weight of the silver dollar in the same percentage as he may reduce the weight of the gold dollar.

In a sharp speech against the bill near the end of the debate, Fess (Rep.), Ohio, declared there never was any occasion for this country's going off the gold standard and denounced the creation of "irredeemable" currency.

"There will be a day of reckoning," said Fess, "when the people awake to the effects of what I fear will be uncontrollable inflation."

Fess recited the broad powers of the President under the Thomas amendment, and expressed his delight that the President had not invoked them. But he wondered how long the President would be able to hold out against the demand of the inflationists for their use.

Robinson of Indiana said the United States, with the stabilization fund, was about to participate in a "great gambling game," and he feared that in the end it would lose all its chips. He understood, he said, that the British had lost a large portion of their equalization fund.

Cutting's View of Bill.

Cutting (Rep.), New Mexico, in announcing support of the bill, said it was a step in the right direction, though "perhaps an infinitestimally small step." It was a good bill, said the Progressive Senator from New Mexico, to the extent that it might help to make the United States "master in its own house," so far as gold bullion was concerned, but it did not attack the fundamental problems of the depression. He had noted the "golden cobweb" spun by Profs. Warren and Rogers, but he believed that any expansion of credit that might result would go to the wrong people—the bankers and not the public.

"We must put purchasing power in the hands of the consumer," said Cutting. "We must equate purchasing power with productive power."

To this end, Cutting said the Government should take control of the credit system of the country through a central agency "for the benefit of the people and not of the bank."

He said that 6,000,000 Americans were still walking the streets looking for jobs, and no program yet adopted would take care of them.

"This bill," said Cutting, "will not increase purchasing power. It will not help to feed one hungry mouth. To paraphrase something that Lloyd George once said, we are doing the right things too late. We have got to speed up if we are to meet the situation with which we are confronted. There are too many people, even in the administration, who are old dealers. The time is coming when the people are going to demand results; they haven't got them yet."

Margin Narrower Than Before on 16 to 1 Issue.

When the silver question was before the Senate last April, in the form of a straight 16-to-1 amendment to the farm bill by Senator Wheeler, the administration won by a vote of 44 to 33. The narrowness of its victory over the silver bloc at that time was a factor in leading the President to accept the Thomas amendment, with its optional inflationary powers.

Today's escape from mandatory inflationist legislation was even narrower. A change of two votes would have incorporated in the pending bill a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver up to 750,000,000 ounces, at a specified rate per month, or until "371.25 grains of pure silver equals in purchasing power 23.22 grains of pure gold." This is the 16-to-1 ratio. The amendment provided for currency inflation through the issuance of silver certificates against the purchased metal.

As originally drafted the amendment called for the purchase of 1,000,000,000 ounces, but this was modified by Senator Wheeler on the floor.

Wheeler Argues for Change.

In a speech of several hours, the Montana Senator said the amendment did not provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the historic 16 to 1 ratio, but was a compromise which would enable the administration to test the validity of the silver men's theory that an increase in the price of silver would redound to the great benefit of American trade in silver using countries.

Wheeler said he was thoroughly convinced that his plan, by raising the price of silver, would raise commodity prices and thereby the general Roosevelt program.

In proof of his point that the silver question was not a partisan one, the Montana Senator went back to Alexander Hamilton, whom he described as "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury prior to the advent of Andrew Mellon." About the only thing that Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson agreed upon, he said, was that our currency should have a bimetallic base. They and not Bryan, he added, were the original outstanding sponsors of the bimetallic theory in this country.

Opposing the Wheeler amendment, Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader, said that it would be harmful to the development of the President's monetary policies. Before taking further action on silver, Robinson said, we should await the outcome of the silver agreement negotiated at the London world economic conference last summer.

Important Measure Goes Through Congress in Two Weeks.

Seldom has a measure of comparable importance gone through Congress with the speed of the President's gold bill. It was less than two weeks ago, on a Monday, that the President sent in his message outlining the purposes of the bill and asking for its passage.

The measure was introduced in the House the next day, was made the subject of brief hearings and a briefer debate and was passed by the House last Saturday. Though the offering of amendments was permitted from the floor, the bill came through unmarked by any change not approved by the administration.

Hearings on the bill by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee were chopped off short last Monday night in response to the demand of administration spokesmen for speed. The committee reported the bill to the Senate the next day and the debate began on Wednesday.

The bill as it came from the committee carried amendments limiting the operation of the stabilization fund and the use of the President's dollar-devaluation powers to three years; placing the fund under a board of five members instead of the Secretary of the Treasury alone; and restricting the use of the fund to dealings in foreign exchange.

The first of these—the time limit—was accepted by the administration and was adopted in the Senate without opposition. The others, which had been approved by the committee largely at the instance of Senator Glass, an outspoken opponent of the new monetary policy, were voted down by the administration forces in the Senate.

Four Sessions of Debate.

The bill was debated at four sessions of the Senate and was passed under a unanimous-consent order limiting speeches to 10 minutes each after 4 p. m. today.

The quick passage of the bill was made possible by the top-heavy Democratic majorities in both branches of Congress and the willingness of these majorities, as well as a considerable number of Republicans, to "go along with the President." The opposition in the House was limited very largely to ineffectual sniping at the bill, particularly at the parts giving the Secretary of the Treasury complete contral over the huge stabilization fund. In the Senate, however, there were carefully considered addresses in opposition, notably those by Senator Hastings (Rep.), Delaware, who attacked the bill on constitutional grounds, and by Senator Glass and Reed (Rep.), Pennsylvania.

Foreknowledge that the bill would pass in the form desired by the President had a dampening effect on the opposition in both houses.

Borah Says Masses, to Benefit, Must Be Protected From Trusts.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—"If the masses are to benefit from the dollar devaluation legislation they must be protected against power monopoly and combines to fix prices as permitted under NRA suspension of anti-trust laws," said Senator Borah of Idaho in a statement issued tonight.

"It will not be possible to give this protection unless the anti-trust laws are restored.

"A cheap dollar will be a bad visitor to the laborer who sees the cost of living controlled by the trusts. Higher prices for farm products will bring little relief if some power is abroad which can raise the prices of everything the farmer buys. It is impractical and impossible to accomplish the desired recovery through NRA codes.

"Shortly we are to appropriate additional funds for public works. Who will get the money? If the prices the laborer must pay for things he has to have to live continue increasing as they have for months, the increased amount expended through public works will be of very little benefit to the laborer.

"If we leave unrestrained power of combines to fix prices, as under NRA codes, we shall legislate in vain to restore contentment and prosperity among the great body of people.

"It is my contention that at this time millions of dollars are being extorted from the pockets of the masses, from the common people, in prices fixed by combines, trusts and monopolies, notwithstanding provisions of NRA codes.

"I believe furthermore that under rules established by these codes, in a large measure by big interests, the provisions are such as to drive out of business thousands upon thousands of small concerns.

"People may talk about Communism, and propaganda from here and there with reference to a change in our form of government, but that which is driving us today to a threatened change in our form of government is the control of those who have the power to assess prices against the people. Instead of destroying and controlling these combines, we seem to be going into partnership with them.

"One of the purposes of the National Recovery Act was to work a more equitable distribution of wealth of the country. But if combines in this country are permitted to continue to collect prices which they see fit to fix, and to drive small business out of the field, the concentration of wealth which hitherto prevailed will not be a circumstance to that which will prevail. As the thing now stands, it is a perfect machine for transferring small holdings of the money to possession of the few.

"Under NRA, combines and trusts establish unfair, destructive competition. That is not protected by NRA and it is prohibited by the anti-trust laws, suspended by NRA."

WAR HERO LOSES FIGHT TO STAY IN U. S. WITH FAMILY

Hugh McLeod, Scotchman Who Twice Re-entered Country Illegally, Ordered Deported.

SENT TO PRISON FOR SECOND OFFENSE

Representative Cochran Helped Obtain Parole for Man Who Has Wife and Two Children.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27. — Hugh McLeod, the thrice decorated World War veteran, who was sentenced to 18 months in the Leavenworth Federal penitentiary because he twice dared to break the immigration laws in order to be with his wife and their American born children, is to be deported.

The labor department immigration board of review has decided that McLeod cannot stay in this country or leave voluntarily. The board's decision marks the end of a losing fight by Representative John J. Cochran of St. Louis, who took an intense interest in the struggle of the former Scottish soldier to remain with his family in this country.

McLeod was sentenced to 18 months by Federal Judge Edward J. Moinet in Detroit last June for having re-entered this country illegally. Nine years ago McLeod had gone to San Francisco from Vancouver, British Columbia, on a visit. While in California he married the American girl who is now his wife. Without straightening out his citizenship papers, he found a job in San Francisco. About five years ago his son, William, was born. The McLeods settled down to a quiet domestic life. They owned an automobile and were making payments on a home.

Convicted in Vancouver.

In June, 1931, immigration authorities found him and charged that he was an undesirable alien, alleged that he was guilty of "moral turpitude" because he had been convicted in Vancouver for "unlawful entry into premises." He was deported to Scotland, his native country. Thirteen months later, McLeod was back with his family in California and got a job. Several weeks later he was recognized and again deported to Scotland. That was in August, 1932.

Three months later he was again back in San Francisco. He was picked up within a week and was brought to Detroit, his point of reentry, for trial. He escaped, however, from a Deputy Marshal after he had said good-by to his wife. Four months later he was arrested in Mrs. McLeod's housekeeping rooms. He had been injured in the San Francisco earthquake. Last summer a second son was born.

Friends tried to intercede for him, but he was sent to Detroit for trial. Judge Moinet sentenced him to 18 months.

At Leavenworth McLeod was a quiet prisoner and was paroled after serving one-third of his sentence. He was detained at the prison, however, awaiting a settlement of his case by the immigration board of review.

Cochran Takes Up Fight.

Representative Cochran became interested in McLeod. He immediately got in touch with the former soldier, hoping to get for him a presidential pardon. He also communicated with Judge Moinet and the Federal District Attorney hoping to get from them a recommendation for leniency. They refused to give this and Cochran then helped McLeod apply for a parole. The application was granted last November.

In November Cochran began his efforts to persuade the immigration officials to let McLeod stay in this country a few months with his family and then leave voluntarily so that he could re-enter legally as the husband of an American citizen.

For a while, the authorities looked with favor on this plan until they learned from California that McLeod had been charged with stealing linen and silverware from a hotel. These charges had not been heard pending the Federal immigration suit. On hearing from Washington, the California officials said that they would press the charges if McLeod returned to that State.

With a voluminous record before them, the members of the Board of Review decided that McLeod should be deported. The board apparently was convinced that the conviction in Vancouver for "unlawful entry into premises" would forever bar McLeod from coming into this country under the immigration laws. In the Vancouver case, McLeod was charged with having taken $10 from a jewelry store. When the case came to trial, the Canadian judge, on learning that McLeod had been in jail 33 days, held that this had been punishment enough, found him guilty and then freed him. The conviction, however, still remains on the record.

End of Fight, Cochran Says.

The board's decision marks the end of a losing fight by Representative John J. Cochran of St. Louis, who took an intense interest in the struggle of the former Scottish soldier to remain with his family in this country.

McLeod was sentenced to 18 months by Federal Judge Edward J. Moinet in Detroit last June for having re-entered this country illegally. Nine years ago McLeod had gone to San Francisco from Vancouver, British Columbia, on a visit. While in California he married the American girl who is now his wife. Without straightening out his citizenship papers, he found a job in San Francisco. About five years ago his son, William, was born. The McLeods settled down to a quiet domestic life. They owned an automobile and were making payments on a home.

Convicted in Vancouver.

In June, 1931, immigration authorities found him and charged that he was an undesirable alien, alleged that he was guilty of "moral turpitude" because he had been convicted in Vancouver for "unlawful entry into premises." He was deported to Scotland, his native country. Thirteen months later, McLeod was back with his family in California and got a job. Several weeks later he was recognized and again deported to Scotland. That was in August, 1932.

Three months later he was again back in San Francisco. He was picked up within a week and was brought to Detroit, his point of re-entry, for trial. He escaped, however, from a Deputy Marshal after he had said good-by to his wife. Four months later he was arrested in Mrs. McLeod's housekeeping rooms. He had been injured in the San Francisco earthquake. Last summer a second son was born.

Friends tried to intercede for him, but he was sent to Detroit for trial. Judge Moinet sentenced him to 18 months.

At Leavenworth McLeod was a quiet prisoner and was paroled after serving one-third of his sentence. He was detained at the prison, however, awaiting a settlement of his case by the immigration board of review.

Cochran Takes Up Fight.

Representative Cochran became interested in McLeod. He immediately got in touch with the former soldier, hoping to get for him a presidential pardon. He also communicated with Judge Moinet and the Federal District Attorney hoping to get from them a recommendation for leniency. They refused to give this and Cochran then helped McLeod apply for a parole. The application was granted last November.

In November Cochran began his efforts to persuade the immigration officials to let McLeod stay in this country a few months with his family and then leave voluntarily so that he could re-enter legally as the husband of an American citizen.

For a while, the authorities looked with favor on this plan until they learned from California that McLeod had been charged with stealing linen and silverware from a hotel. These charges had not been heard pending the Federal immigration suit. On hearing from Washington, the California officials said that they would press the charges if McLeod returned to that State.

With a voluminous record before them, the members of the Board of Review decided that McLeod should be deported. The board apparently was convinced that the conviction in Vancouver for "unlawful entry into premises" would forever bar McLeod from coming into this country under the immigration laws. In the Vancouver case, McLeod was charged with having taken $10 from a jewelry store. When the case came to trial, the Canadian judge, on learning that McLeod had been in jail 33 days, held that this had been punishment enough, found him guilty and then freed him. The conviction, however, still remains on the record.

End of Fight, Cochran Says.

Cochran had a long conference yesterday with W. W. Husband, Assistant Secretary of Labor, regarding McLeod. After the conference, Cochran said that he had gone through the record and could find no way whereby McLeod could remain legally in this country temporarily with his family or leave voluntarily and return under the immigration laws.

"I have exhausted all the means at my disposal to obtain clemency for this man," Cochran said today. "He told me that there is no merit in the charges against him in San Francisco that he attempted to sell linen and silverware obtained from a hotel. He says that this was given to him by hotel officials.

"The conviction in Vancouver, according to the findings of the Board of Review, must forever remain a bar to his legal re-entry into this country under the immigration laws. I am hoping that the immigration authorities will deport McLeod to Canada, where he may be able to get a job and send for his wife. My sole interest in this case was to do something that might enable this family to live together in peace and quiet."

So far as is known here, McLeod is still in Leavenworth waiting until the immigration authorities can obtain a British passport for him.

GIRL WOUNDED BY SHOT FIRED BY BOY ON TRUCK

Air Rifle Fired When Vehicle Passes Home of Virginia Kujath.

Virginia Kujath, 9 years old, was wounded in the left cheek last night by a shot from an air rifle, fired by one of several boys who rode past her home at 5013 Benedict avenue in a dump truck.

The girl and her 12-year-old brother, Oliver, said the boy aimed the rifle at her as she was playing in the street near their home. She was treated at City Hospital and is to return there today for an X-ray examination.

Police obtained the license number of the truck, and questioned the driver. He aided them in their search for the boys who were riding with him.

A 15-year-old boy who lives in the neighborhood, admitted, police said, that he had fired the shot, but stated he had aimed at a bird and did not see the girl. He was turned over to his parents and the case will be referred to the Juvenile Court.

INDIANA TO RECEIVE DILLINGER GANGSTERS

Desperadoes in Arizona May Be Taken Also to Other States to Face Extreme Penalties.

By the Associated Press.

TUCSON, Ariz., Jan. 27.—Indiana, one of the battle grounds of the Dillinger mob, will get back the desperadoes captured here Thursday, barring possible legal complications, but the gangsters may be taken on from there to other states to face extreme penalties.

The gang will be taken to Indianapolis and sent from there to counties or states "where convictions of murder can be had."

Gov. McNutt of Indiana telegraphed Gov. Moeur of Arizona that extradition papers for Dillinger, Harry Pierpont, alleged "trigger man"; Russell Clark and Charles Makley "and their women companions" had been sent by air mail. The Arizona Governor said extradition would be granted.

The Arizona Governor's office understood an agreement had been reached with Gov. George C. White of Ohio and Gov. Henry Horner of Illinois where the fugitives also are wanted.

Tucson authorities indicated they might seek to hold the prisoners until posted rewards are paid.

"I believe that counties and states paying the rewards they have posted should be given first consideration in extradition proceedings," said Justice of the Peace C. V. Budlong, who yesterday named the heavy bond to keep the "dangerous Dillingers" in jail here, "for the reason that rewards frequently go unpaid after extradition has been granted. The city police are entitled to rewards for their splendid work in rounding up the gangsters."

Among the more serious crimes attributed to the gang are the murder of Sheriff Jesse Sarber in Lima, O., when three men delivered John Dillinger from the jail there; the murder of Police Sergeant William T. Shanley in Chicago, and the killing of Policeman Patrick O'Malley at East Chicago, Ind., during a $20,000 bank holdup. John Hamilton, still at large, has been named by officers as the actual slayer of Shanley.

MARY PICKFORD UNDER GUARD AFTER MYSTERIOUS MEETING

Man and Woman Try to Interest Her in Documents, Nature of Which Is Undisclosed.

By the Associated Press.

FALMOUTH, Mass., Jan. 27.—Mary Pickford, motion picture actress, who came here from Boston after she had been annoyed, she said, by a man and a woman who sought to interest her in mysterious documents, today said she had no fear of racketeers or kidnapers. She said none of the five or six telephone calls she had received nor either of two letters could be interpreted as threats.

"You may tell the public," she told reporters at the home of Fulton Cursler, playwright and magazine editor, "that I am guarded at all times. I am not afraid of any racketeers or kidnapers. I have two special guards with me at all times."

The actress said that the man and a woman had sought repeatedly to interest her in documents which they said would be very valuable to her. She said she had no idea what the documents could be but that finally she agreed to a meeting at her hotel. The man, she said, had peculiar eyes and stared at her maid in a manner which led her to believe he was attempting to hypnotize her. He left suddenly, she said, with the remark: "I have those two things to attend to."

Miss Pickford quoted the woman as then remarking: "Evidently you are not interested in the divine message we have for you." The actress said she replied: "No, I am not interested in spiritualism."

Miss Pickford said she had turned over to the Boston police two typewritten letters.

FOUR DIRECTORS ARE DROPPED BY CONTINENTAL LIFE

Louis Marks, Secretary, Who Has Been Witness for State, Not Re-elected at Annual Meeting.

Louis Marks, who as secretary of the Continental Life Insurance Co., has been a witness for the State Insurance Department in its insolvency suit against the company, and three other directors were not re-elected at the annual stockholders' meeting Jan. 16, it was learned last night.

The other three are Dr. C. R. Dudley, W. R. Foley and A. A. Jekel. The names of those who failed of re-election were determined by comparing a list of the directors elected at the annual meeting, which included five new names, with a list of the 1933 directors in the report of examiners for the Insurance Department.

The five new directors are Frank Pace of Little Rock, Ark., associate counsel for the company in the insolvency and dissolution suit; I. Carman Smith; W. A. Adams; A. P. Hartman; W. B. Ittner Jr. The city directory lists an I. C. Smith as a teller for the Grand National Bank.

Marks has testified that a special directors' meeting was called Jan. 2, at which Ed Mays, president, requested that Albert D. Nortoni be elected general counsel in place of Charles G. Revelle. The meeting was called, he said, after directors had been told that Insurance Superintendent O'Malley had designated Revelle as attorney for an examination of the company the Missouri department proposed to make.

The proposition was carried, he said, by the affirmative vote of seven directors, but he voted against it and Dr. Dudley and Revelle did not vote. Executives of the company would not say then whether these three were re-elected at the meeting Jan. 16.

At the adjournment of the trial Friday, Circuit Judge Ryan called for a list, to be presented to him tomorrow, of the officers and directors of companies controlled by Mays, from 1927 to the present.

One of the five new directors was elected, apparently, to replace James G. Ferguson, brother-in-law of Mays, who had resigned last October. Revelle was ousted Jan. 2 as general counsel for the company and was replaced as a director by W. H. Morgens.

Tomorrow will be the fourteenth day of the trial in which the Insurance Department seeks dissolution of the company, alleging insolvency and mismanagement.

BILL SEEKS SIX-HOUR DAY FOR TRANSPORTATION WORKERS

Senator Black Introduces Measure Which Would Apply to All Interstate Carriers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A six-hour day for employes of companies engaged in interstate transportation is proposed in a bill introduced today by Senator Black (Dem.), Alabama.

The bill, which would take effect July 1, provides for a commission of three, appointed by the President, which would study operation of the shortened day over a period of from nine to 12 months. An appropriation of $50,000 was asked for the experiment.

Black also introduced a bill to be effective immediately, limiting the hours of consecutive service of various classes of employes of common carriers. Under its terms every employe would have at least 12 consecutive hours out of 24 off duty. Office, station or train service employes engaged in the handling of orders governing train movements would have a maximum work day of nine hours, and train dispatchers would not be permitted to work longer than six hours.

BELLEVILLE COAL GROUP OBJECTS TO NRA PRICE RATE

Meeting Called in Chicago to Try to Settle Controversy Between Illinois Producers.

Representatives of the Belleville Group Coal Association, operating mines in nearby Illinois, will attend a meeting in Chicago tomorrow and Tuesday called by Joseph Harrington, divisional code authority, in an effort to settle price controversies between coal producers.

E. J. Wallace of St. Louis, president of the Belleville Group and of the St. Louis Wholesale Coal Association, said the difficulty arose when the NRA code authority ordered an increase in the mine price in the Belleville territory, which produces a cheap grade of coal.

Wallace charged Chicago interests which operate Franklin County mines had influenced the coal code authority to order the increase to reduce the differential between the prices of low grade and high grade coal, such as is produced in Franklin County, and so encourage the use of the Franklin County fuel. He said the Belleville operators were prepared to carry their case to Washington.

Mines in this group, Wallace said, had been charging $1.55 a ton outside of the immediate St. Louis area, and $1.80 a ton in the area adjacent to St. Louis. The code authority, he said, ordered a flat rate of $1.90 a ton.

News dispatches from Chicago referred to a "price war" in the St. Louis metropolitan area. Wallace said that condition did not exist, that the Belleville mines could make money at the prices they had been charging, and that these enabled them to maintain a payroll of about $10,000,000 a year.

The Chicago meeting will also take up differences between Illinois and Indiana operators arising out of the functioning of the coal code. The code takes no account of the distance of mines from their markets, coal men said, and operators in places where high freight rates prevail have been absorbing these charges, resulting in reduced returns to themselves.

Telegrams demanding arbitration of these controversies were dispatched by the NRA last week. All approved price schedules were canceled, varying price minimums were set, freight absorption barred and zoning limited.

A national meeting will be held in Washington, Feb. 12, to consider revisions in the code affecting hours, wages and price differentials.

TWO MEN CROSSING STREET HIT AND INJURED BY AUTO

Jacob Malse, 58-year-old laborer, 2841 Abner place, suffered a fracture of the left leg when he was struck by an automobile driven by Milton H. Eckhardt, president of the Eckhardt Home Furnishing Co., when he was crossing Union boulevard at Terry avenue about 9 p. m. last night.

Eckhardt, who resides at 6150 Emma avenue, said his vision was obscured by another machine. Thomas Costello, 43, of 5320 Terry avenue, who was crossing with Malse, was also struck and suffered bruises of the leg. Eckhardt stopped his car and took both men to City Hospital.

COMMISSIONER BALKS REVOLT PLAN ON WELFARE ISLAND

Suspends Warden and Medical Officer; 33 Inmates Collapse Without Narcotics.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Commissioner Austin H. MacCormick, by a sharp command, put down a threatened revolt of a group of Welfare Island prisoners today and then suspended Warden Joseph A. McCann and Dr. Abraham Norman, medical officer.

He charged McCann with "incompetency, inefficiency and neglect of duty in that he failed to exercise proper supervision and direction over his subordinates and the property and food in the institution. Acting Deputy Warden Lazarus Levy was appointed acting warden.

Commissioner McCormick was inspecting a cell block when 12 inmates lingered in the exercise yard after a general call came for prisoners to return to their cells.

The group assumed defiant postures when guards told them to hurry along. They said they intended to stay where they were.

MacCormick, overhearing the argument, shouted to the prisoners: "You will go back to your places now or you will be carried back."

The prisoners sullenly obeyed the command, and a revolt that keepers feared would become general was averted.

Commissioner MacCormick said that the next few days would be the most critical at the prison as he withdraws special privileges, halts the narcotic traffic and crushes the rule of gangsters who lived in luxury at the institution.

"In a word," said MacCormick, "we have stopped all the men from doing things they had been accustomed to doing. Such a situation sometimes causes trouble."

The volume of the prison traffic in drugs became more apparent today as five more addicts collapsed from the lack of their habitual dosage and were taken to the hospital. To date 33 inmates have collapsed for the same reason.

SAYS LINDBERGH PAID TAX ON AIR MAIL STOCK 'GIFT'

Washington Star Reports Flyer Regarded $250,000 in Securities as Compensation.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Washington Star will say in a copyrighted story tomorrow that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who was named before the Senate Air Mail Investigating Committee as a recipient of a $250,000 stock "gift," from the Transcontinental Air Transport Corporation, accepted the contribution as compensation for services rendered and paid income taxes on it.

Senator Black (Dem.), Alabama, chairman of the committee, said tonight he knew nothing about Lindbergh's income tax affairs.

He said, however, he had received from Lindbergh replies to a formal questionnaire sent by the committee. He declined to make the answers public, explaining that Lindbergh's questionnaire was "one in about 400."

"There isn't any doubt that the stock was a gift, in my opinion," he added.

RADIUM WORTH $7500 IS GIVEN TO ST. LUKE'S

Provision Made That Hospital Make No Charge for Use of It.

An anonymous gift of 100 milligrams of radium, valued at $7500, to St. Luke's Hospital was announced by the Rev. Rufus Putney, superintendent, in his annual report yesterday.

It was given on condition that no one ever pay for the use of radium at St. Luke's, whether the patient be rich or poor, and that it be considered a trust to benefit humanity. The same donor has promised a second gift of 100 milligrams of radium to the hospital as need for it develops.

A deficit of $55,397 for 1933 was reported, which was about $13,000 less than the 1932 deficit. Reductions in salaries and close economy in other expenses made the deficit less. Total expenditures for 1933 were $362,600 and the receipts were $307,202.

Assets of the hospital are $3,216,081.72, of which $947,020.79 is in property and the balance in bequests, endowments and trust funds.

The hospital gave 8512 absolutely free days' services during 1933, which at the regular rates would cost $60,671. There were also 10,272 part-free days. There were 12,296 visits in the social service and out-patient departments, 12,020 laboratory tests, 2012 patients in the X-ray department, 438 babies born during the year at the hospital. There were 2485 operations last year. The number of patients cared for during the year was 3883. There were 156 deaths, including those from accidents.

John H. Craig, president-treasurer of the Craig Upholstering Co., 2915 Clark avenue, was slugged and robbed of $60, his watch and automobile by two negroes, who held him up as he was entering the car on a parking lot at Tenth street and Lucas avenue last night.

Craig, who resides at 315 South Gore avenue, Webster Groves, was on his way home from the Missouri Athletic Association. The men ordered him out of the automobile and one struck him on the head with a pistol. He was treated for a scalp wound at the City Hospital.

ANTI-TRUST MOVE INDICATED AGAINST MELLON CONCERN

Attorney-General Discloses Investigation of Aluminum Co. Is Nearly Ended; Navy Holds Up Bids.

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Prosecution of the Mellon-owned Aluminum Co. of America, under the Federal anti-trust laws, averted during the Coolidge administration, appears to be an early possibility under the Roosevelt administration.

Almost simultaneously with Attorney-General Cummings' disclosure that his subordinates have almost completed an investigation of the company and also of former Treasury secretary Andrew Mellon's income tax returns during his term of office, the Navy Department announced that it was withholding acceptance of bids on more than $1,000,000 worth of aluminum to be used in the construction of warships, on the ground that two of the bidders apparently had acted in collusion.

Bids Almost Identical.

The complaint was filed with the Navy Department by Oswald Schuette, representing a number of independent aluminum fabricators. It pointed out the bids of the Mellon company and Fairmount (West Virginia) Aluminum Company were almost identical in terms. The West Virginia company is reported to purchase some of its raw materials from the Mellon-owned company.

Cummings also said he had been asked to scrutinize the NRA code submitted by the aluminum industry and purposes to do so when "it is a little further along." National recovery officials have characterized the code submitted by the Mellon concern as "the very worst" among more than 4000 that have been received. It would actually reduce existing wages.

Independents Complain.

Independent fabricators must buy their raw material from the Mellon company, because it, in conjunction with its European and Asiatic connections, has a world monopoly on bauxite ore, from which the metal is derived. They have complained that the Mellon company compels them to pay more for the raw materials than it charges its own manufacturing subsidiaries, thus making competition difficult and unprofitable. If such a state of facts can be shown to exist, it would undoubtedly constitute a satisfactory basis for action under the anti-trust laws.

Donald L. Richberg, NRA general counsel, said today that the pending aluminum code was being revised to meet that situation, but added that two of the independents had "jumped the reservation" because they objected to making their costs public.

No Free Legal Service.

Incidentally, the Attorney-General announced that the practice of passing on the legality of codes or understandings entered into by trade associations has been discontinued by the Department of Justice and will not be resumed during his tenure. The Hoover administration encouraged the submission of such arrangements and furnished opinions on their legality. It amounted to giving them an immunity bath under the anti-trust laws.

"These people are well able to hire the very best legal advice that is obtainable," Cummings declared. "There is no reason why the Government should be expected to supply it. Furthermore, it has been a commonplace of our experience that plans or practice which appear at first blush to be legal and fair, turn out to be quite the opposite in their operation. I do not propose for the department to bind itself or be bound with reference to possible future action."

When Stone Was Promoted.

Former Attorney-General Harlan F. Stone was preparing to prosecute the Aluminum Co. of America when he was appointed to the Supreme Court. His decision was the result of a series of slashing attacks on the company's trade practices by the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana. Among other things, Walsh showed that the corporation was permitted to write off millions of Federal taxes on the ground that a patriotic desire to serve the Government during the war had caused it to construct excess plant and equipment, but when the Federal Trade Commission later inquired into its refusal to sell material to independent competitors, its reply was that its plant and equipment were not sufficient to fill the demand.

Orchid Six Feet Tall at Shaw's Garden

New Orchid Specimens At Shaw's Garden Show

Two of Plants in First Mass Display of Hybrids Making World Debut—Exhibit Opens Today.

Flowers new to the world are displayed in the Orchid Show opening today at Shaw's Garden.

They mark the debut, in the annual show—most famous of its sort—of hybrids from the thousands grown from the microscopic seeds by the secret process developed at the garden by Elinor Alberts Linder. For five years they have been maturing in the special orchid houses of the Shaw's Garden Arboretum at Gray Summit.

Perhaps a dozen were shown in the National Flower and Garden Show last March at the Arena, and one or two of the new varieties have been displayed from time to time in the "orchid alcoves" at the garden in town, but today marks their first major display. Dozens are shown, hundreds more are flowering now at Gray Summit, and thousands of others are maturing, to multiply the resources of a collection already recognized as the world's finest group of show orchids.

These are the rarities, the special gems of the show. But the orchid setting for these gems, the bulk of the show, is made up of orchids never before shown in mass in St. Louis. This year marks the passing of the Cattleya types of the Andes from the center of the stage, and the accession of the less usual sprays and the small, daintily colored and ineffably symmetrical dendrobium varieties of the Himalayas.

Aptly enough, this year's show has been designed by Floriculturist Kohl in the form of an old Spanish-American patio, like dozens visited by Supt. Pring 12 yeasr ago, when he wrested from Andean tree-tops the parent Cattleyas which first put the Shaw's Garden show internationally "on the map."

It's only a hollow frame, but it looks creamy, sun-drenched, mellowed by centuries. Its two arched galleries flank a courtyard paved in colored stones about a fern-bordered pool of rare tropical lilies, pink, blue and white. Through an arch at the back lowers the jungle, relieved by nodding orchids on the ground, in the trees, sometimes bright, sometimes dark of flower and oddly grim.

Strolling through the galleries, visitors—their overcoats and wraps an odd contrast to the torrid setting—find orchids shown in alcoves, sunny blossoms alight against a profound backing of maidenhair ferns and other greenery. Altogether in those galleries are 1500 of the rarest orchid plants in the world—thousands of blossoms—and all but one alcove in the east gallery are dendrobiums.

One great group of these, an entire alcove of 60 plants, each bearing many blossoms, is one of the hybrids created at the garden and never shown before. Its parents, dendrobiums from the Himalayas, have their place at the head of the alcove, with all the "children" ranged below. They are the white Cassiope and the mauve-tipped nobile giganteum. Not one of the offspring loses the mauve-tipped petals of the nobile, and all, of course, have the magenta throat that comes from both parents.

The other new hybrid, even the general type of which is rare in the orchid world and has never been seen in numbers in St. Louis, also has an alcove to itself. No less than 400 other plants of the same cross—new to the world—are coming into flower at Gray Summit.

It is an offspring of the Brasso-Cattleya Fournierii crossed on the Cattleya trianae, the familiar mauve "Tulipan" which has been for years previously the mainstay of the St. Louis show and of florist orchids everywhere. Both the parents are mauve, with a yellow throat and a winy lip. But the Brasso-Cattleya, of a pretensious line of hybrids, is comparatively immense and has a great, exquisitely fringed lip.

The new hybrid demonstrates, in some of the offspring, the realization of a flower-artist's dream, for it perpetuates the finer qualities of both parents. The color in both leaves nothing to be desired. But the Tulipan is small, and the Brasso-Cattleya, large and marvelously tinted though it is, inherits from its parent Brassavola scrawny, irregular petals which strike some connoisseurs as a ridiculous contrast to its fringed lip.

SOVIET DICTATOR WARNS GERMANY, JAPAN ABOUT WAR

Attack on Russia Will Mean a World Revolution in Asia and Europe, Stalin Declares.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, Jan. 27.—A war against the Soviet Union would start a world revolution in Asia and Europe, which would crush capitalistic governments in a number of countries, Joseph Stalin told the All-Union Communist Party Congress in a speech, the text of which was made public tonight.

He decried the activities of "war mongers" having designs against the Soviet state but pledged his country to be ready to fight if necessary.

"We warn everybody not to poke their snouts into the Soviet potato patch," he declared, applying by implication the name "swine" to those nations which cherish warlike designs against Russia.

He singled out Japan and Germany for particular criticism in the section of his address which dealt with the Soviet foreign policy.

War Behind the Lines.

"It is a mistake to think an ambition to wage war against the Soviet Union and share its territory is held only by Japanese military circles," he said.

SOVIET DICTATOR WARNS GERMANY, JAPAN ABOUT WAR

Attack on Russia Will Mean a World Revolution in Asia and Europe, Stalin Declares.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, Jan. 27.—A war against the Soviet Union would start a world revolution in Asia and Europe, which would crush capitalistic governments in a number of countries, Joseph Stalin told the All-Union Communist Party Congress in a speech, the text of which was made public tonight.

He decried the activities of "war mongers" having designs against the Soviet state but pledged his country to be ready to fight if necessary.

"We warn everybody not to poke their snouts into the Soviet potato patch," he declared, applying by implication the name "swine" to those nations which cherish warlike designs against Russia.

He singled out Japan and Germany for particular criticism in the section of his address which dealt with the Soviet foreign policy.

War Behind the Lines.

"It is a mistake to think an ambition to wage war against the Soviet Union and share its territory is held only by Japanese military circles," he said.

"We know very well it is shared by some political circles in Europe. But if this happens it will be the most dangerous war for mankind in history not only because the population of the Soviet Union will fight to death to defend the country, but because the war also will take place behind the lines of our enemies, where our numerous friends would deal a mortal blow to those daring to take up arms against the Soviet Union.

"These latter will be responsible if they bring about a revolution in a number of countries in Europe and Asia and complete the destruction of land-owner governments."

Japan Needs Pact, Too.

The head of the Communist Party declared that "Japan needs a non-aggression pact as much as the Soviet Union" in recalling Russia's unsuccessful effort to negotiate such instruments with the island empire in furtherance of its expressed desire for peace in the Far East.

The Russian expression Stalin used for "snout" is literally "swine's nose." His speech—his first public utterance in more than a year—consisted of about 30,000 words, fully one-fourth of which was devoted to international relations.

Reviewing the success of the Soviet campaign to negotiate non-aggression pacts with neighbors and a great improvement in relations with the erstwhile enemies France and Poland, Stalin found two dark spots on the horizon of Russia's international relations—Japan and Germany.

"Relations between Japan and the U. S. S. R. need serious improvement," the Communist leader maintained.

"Japan's refusal to sign a non-aggression pact underlines once more that all is not well in our relations.

Some Japanese Activities.

"The interruption in negotiations for the sale of the Chinese Eastern Railway to Manchukuo was not the fault of the Soviet Union, but grew out of illegal activities of Japanese agents in arresting Soviet employes of the railroad.

"Also, the part of Japanese militarists was important in issuing propaganda regarding the necessity for war with the U. S. S. R. and the occupation of the Russian maritime provinces.

"The Japanese Government, instead of calling them to order, assumes an attitude of unconcern.

"Under such circumstances it is not difficult to understand the atmosphere of excitement and uncertainty that is created.

"Of course we are continuing our peaceful policy and striving to improve relations with Japan, but everything does not depend upon us.

"That is why we must adopt measures to defend our country."

Bright Spot in U. S.

Referring to the strained relations between Russia and Germany, Stalin attributed it to a "change of policy in Germany, where dominant circles now want the Ukraine and are putting forth efforts to change the Baltic countries into a base for an attack against the U. S. S. R."

He found a bright spot in the establishment of normal relations with the United States.

"No doubt the rapprochement with the United States has a very important significance in the whole system of international relationships," the Communist chieftain continued.

"This is not only because an increased possibility for keeping peace is strengthening trade relations and the organization of a base for mutual co-operation, but because an end has been put to past policies when the United States was considered the strong-hold of anti-Soviet tendencies."

Appeals to Workers.

Vyacheslaff Molotoff, president of the Soviet Council of Commissars, declared in a speech opening the seventeenth party gathering last night that "our party, which controls infallibly the whole Socialist construction, is growing and strengthening as the vanguard of Communist international."

He appealed, he said, "to the millions of proletarians outside the Soviet Union and to oppressed colonial peoples" and maintained that "we connect inextricably our fight for the victory of Socialism with the revolutionary struggle of the workers of the whole world against capitalism."

COUNTER-INVESTIGATIONS STARTED IN NEW ORLEANS

Long and Walmsley Forces Each Charge Padding of the Public Payrolls.

By the Associated Press.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 27.—The sworn "war of extermination" between the political machines of Senator Huey P. Long and Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley was off to a thunderous start today in counter investigations in which each hoped to "show up" the other.

District Attorney Eugene Stanley, re-elected with Walmsley's old line regulars in a sweeping victory over the Long forces in last Tuesday's primary, fired the first shot. Enjoined by Gov. O. K. Allen from touching the records of the State agencies which the Governor placed in the hands of the National Guard, Stanley went to the banks and there, through court order, obtained the financial statements of the State offices with which he expects to show wholesale padding of State payrolls by the Long machine prior to the municipal primary.

Long moved quickly in retaliation. He sent the State Attorney-General's forces into another section of Criminal District Court with a demand for a sweeping investigation into City Hall affairs, charging the padding of city payrolls in the interest of the old regular election campaign, huge outlays by public utilities in behalf of the City Hall ticket and "the existence of wide open gambling throughout New Orleans."

BIG ARBITRARY RETURNS MADE BY COUNTY ASSESSOR

In One Instance He Doubles Levy Made Last Year on Man Who Fails to File.

Personal property tax returns for 1934 taxes in St. Louis County have been certified to the County Clerk by Assessor Neaf. The valuations are as of last June 1.

Included in the list are some levies made arbitrarily by the Assessor, in instances where returns were not made by persons supposed to own considerable amounts of personal property. The Assessor has the fight to double the figure which he thinks is a fair retur in such a case.

Heading the list of arbitrary levies is $371,200 assessed against Adolph Baumann, 11 Schulz road, Oakland. This is exactly twice the arbitrary levey made against him last year. He has failed to make a return or pay taxes on personal property for several years.

Other arbitrary assessments exceeding $25,000 are: G. Morrisey, 6900 Pershing avenue, University City, $176,400; S. Smith, 6631 Washington avenue, University City, $80,000; F. E. Orcutt, 6602 Clemens avenue, University City, $51,300; R. H. Downing, Kirkwood, $38,400; Frank H. Brown, Kirkwood, $38,400; E. L. Butler, 6815 Washington avenue, University City, $32,000; J. E. Schaeffer, 7081 Pershing avenue, University City, $29,440; M. S. Baird, 831 Big Bend boulevard, Oakland, $27,560; Blane Rhodes, University City, $25,600.

Other Personal Returns.

Returns by property owners on valuation of their personal property, exceeding $15,000, were:

Joseph Pulitzer, Ladue, $77,810; M. B. Greensfelder, 115 North Meramec avenue, Clayton, $64,700; F. W. A. Vesper, Heintz road, $39,370; James L. Johnson, Huntleigh, $27,150; Mrs. Clarence Howard, 8900 Lackland road, $24,750; Dr. E. Lawrence Keyes, Ladue, $23,920; Joseph Desloge, Florissant, $21,270; Herman Wilmas, Chesterfield, $20,670; Joseph A. Mueller, Ladue road, $20,350; Philip Hunkler, Webster Groves, $18,820; Theron E. Catlin, 41 West Brentmoor Park, Clayton, $18,650; Mrs. Rose L. Hesse, 745 Atlanta avenue, Webster Groves, $18,100; Mrs. Marie de Penaloza, 1 Allen avenue, Ferguson, $16,100.

Returns of Large Estates.

Returns on estates, exceeding $25,000, were:

Harry Manne, Ritenour, $83,160; Thomas S. Gerhart, Clayton, $72,650; Thomas E. Price Jr., Valley Park, $59,130; Jeanetta M. Schokmiller, Kirkwood, $57,900; Abraham Rosenburg, Clayton, $56,770; James A. W. Lewis, University City, $55,860; William F. Woerner, Clayton, $55,320; William P. Schaaf, Maplewood, $49,000: Adeline Kessler, Clayton, $39,150; C. W. Parker, University City, $34,540; Walter J. Holbrook, Clayton, $31,380; Marie Schweitzer, Creve Coeur, $26,800; Louis Muckerman, Clayton, $26,280; Leon Pearlstone, Clayton, $25,570.

The returns have not been added yet. Usually the personal property levy in the county runs from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. Announcement has not been made of the real estate assessment for this year's taxes. The County Board of Equalization, to hear complaints against realty levies, will meet in March.

MAN ON HONEYMOON KILLED, WIFE HELD

Californian Found on New Jersey Roadside With Bullet in Temple.

By the Associated Press.

MT. HOLLY, N. J., Jan. 27.—A California man on his honeymoon to New York was found dead in his automobile near Florence with a pistol wound in the right temple early today. His bride, Mrs. Anna May Edouard, 47, of Los Angeles, said her husband, Millard S. F. Edouard, 45, drew his car to the side of the road and fired the shot.

Although no charge has been lodged against her, Mrs. Edouard is being held in the Burlington County jail for further investigation by Ellis Parker, chief of county detectives, and Howard Eastwood, county prosecutor.

Mrs. Edouard said her husband had been despondent during the trip across the continent, and had threatened suicide almost daily with the 25-caliber pistol he carried for protection. She told Eastwood and Parker that her husband, whom she married on Jan. 14, leaving that day for New York, said he was a real estate promoter near Chicago. The wedding took place in Los Angeles, where the couple met last Aug. 1, she said, but added she did not know what her husband was doing there. He told her he had been married and divorced.

Mrs. Edouard told police she also had been married, to a Dr. McLeod of St. Joseph, Mo., but separated from him in 1916, and later was divorced. Her husband, she said, told her he had money due in New York and that was the reason for the transcontinental journey, during which the couple stopped at tourists camps and low-priced hotels. No money was found in Edouard's pockets, and Mrs. Edouard had only $6.

County Physician Daniel F. Reimer performed an autopsy tonight and later said the wound "could have been either self-inflicted or fired by another person."

Parker said he had learned that Mrs. Edouard formerly was a nurse in a St. Louis hospital. He said he had made inquiries of the superintendent of the institution.

TOUHY DEFENSE FAILS TO SHAKE JAKE THE BARBER

He Sticks to His Identification of Gang Leader and Two Associates as His Kidnapers.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Protected by prosecutors from questions about his own alleged misdeeds, John (Jake the Barber) Factor reaffirmed from the witness stand today under cross-examination his identification of three Touhy gangsters as the men who kidnaped him for $70,000 ransom.

Defense Attorney William Scott Stewart attacked his testimony, bringing forth that Factor saw his abductors in dim light his eyes blurred from days of being blindfolded. But Factor grimly repeated, "I saw them, and I'd know them anywhere, any time, always."

The three men directly accused by Factor—Roger Touhy, Gustav (Gloomy Gus) Schafer and Albert (Polly Nose) Kator—gazed sullenly at the witness and frequently conferred among themselves. The fourth defendant, Thomas (Father Tom) McFadden, gazed about the courtroom with the serenity of his 60 odd years. Prosecutors have promised to connect him directly with the case next week.

Many Lines of Questioning.

Stewart tried a dozen lines of questioning to bring out that Factor hoped by assisting in the present prosecution he might aid his own legal fight against removal to England to face charges of a $7,000,000 stock fraud. He also referred to Factor's acquaintance with Murray Humphreys, Sam Hunt and other Capone gangsters, apparently in trying to prove his contention that Capone leaders instigated the kidnaping charges against the Touhys in order to remove them from racket, gambling and vice competition.

He also questioned Factor about the St. Paul trial of the Touhy gang in which Touhy and three others were acquitted recently in the $100,000 kidnaping of William Hamm Jr., millionaire brewer.

Assistant State's Attorney Wilbert Crowley, blond, lanky, young prosecutor, later brought out that Factor went to St. Paul on a Government subpena. Factor told Stewart that he desired to see the Touhys convicted there, in order that "justice might be done." Stewart's questions about the Capone gang came in connection with the kidnaping last April of the stock plunger's 20-year-old son, Jerome.

Asked About Son's Release.

"Did you pay any ransom for Jerome's release?" he was asked. "No."

"You don't accuse Mr. Touhy and his friends of kidnaping him?" "No."

"Did Murray Humphreys and Sam Hunt (Capone gangsters) assist in trying to free Jerome?" "Yes."

"Did you pay them anything, or did they ask for pay?" "No."

Questions by the defense attorney into Factor's business and personal integrity included whether action had been started against him for operating in Florida real estate in 1925; whether a British clergyman had charged him with fraud in a suit, and whether many of his English creditors were still not satisfied, despite a $1,300,000 restitution by Factor. Objections stopped the witness from answering them.

Traces His Early Life.

A query by Stewart about whether Factor once fled to Mexico in fear of being killed by Jack (Legs) Diamond, New York gangster, also was halted by an objection, but not until Factor had shook his head negatively and laughed.

Factor, testifying in a monotone, beamed upon the Court as he traced his early life. He came to America at the age of 11 from Hull, England, Factor said; was successively a bootblack, newsboy, messenger boy and barber on Chicago's West Side. Then he entered the employment of a brokerage house, finally owning his own firm in Toronto, Ontario.

It was expected that the rest of the State's 100 witnesses would be used to show that Touhy, the late Willie Sharky, Kator and McFadden were all closely associated before and after the Factor kidnaping, and operated at least two meeting places and "hideouts."

BIG DECLINE IN BUSINESS FAILURES LAST HALF OF '33

NRA Reports 47 Pct. Drop From Same Period in 1932; 31 Pct. Less Than in 1928.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Figures showing a huge decline in commercial failures during the final half of 1933, not only from the previous year but from pre-depression levels, were issued today by the National Recovery Administration.

A report by Arthur D. Whiteside, Division Administrator, and special assistant to Hugh S. Johnson in charge of credit affairs, was put forward as a partial answer to assertion that the NRA has caused serious injury to small business.

It showed business bankruptcies for Jury to December, 1933, inclusive, the first six months of NRA, to have been only 7584, or 47 per cent below the 14,389 total for the last half of 1932, and 31 per cent under the 11,014 figure for the final six months of 1928. The decline was evenly distributed among big and small concerns.

William D. Collins, retired leather manufacturer, who died Nov. 14, left property valued at $51,665, as shown in an inventory filed in Probate Court yesterday. The principal asset is corporation stock carried at $42,880.

In his will Mr. Collins left his estate in trust for the benefit of his mother, Mrs. Susan Y. Collins, and sister, Miss Lenita Collins. He bequeathed $1 each to his widow, Mrs. Jane Brown Collins; a son, Douglas Collins; a daughter, Mrs. Janet Collins Johns, and two grandchildren.

FLYING CADETS' COMMISSIONS DELAYED FOR TWO YEARS

New Regulations Require Tactical and Reserve Officer Training; Partly an Economy Measure.

By the Associated Press.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 27.—A telegram from the War Department to Kelly Field today directed that flying cadets be sent to duty with tactical units for one year as cadets and one year as reserve officers in place of being commissioned immediately upon graduation here.

It was understood the action by the chief of the Air Corps was partly an economy measure and also aimed to keep down loss of life and equipment by newly graduated reserve officers. In some instances it was said newly commissioned officers have displayed a tendency to "show off."

The next class graduates at the advanced flying school Feb. 28. In this class are eight student officers and 64 flying cadets. Four, however, have declined to accept active duty as cadets. They probably will be commissioned as second Lieutenants in the Air Corps reserve and return to their homes after graduation.

Under the new ruling it was understood the graduates will be permitted two years' active duty in place of one.

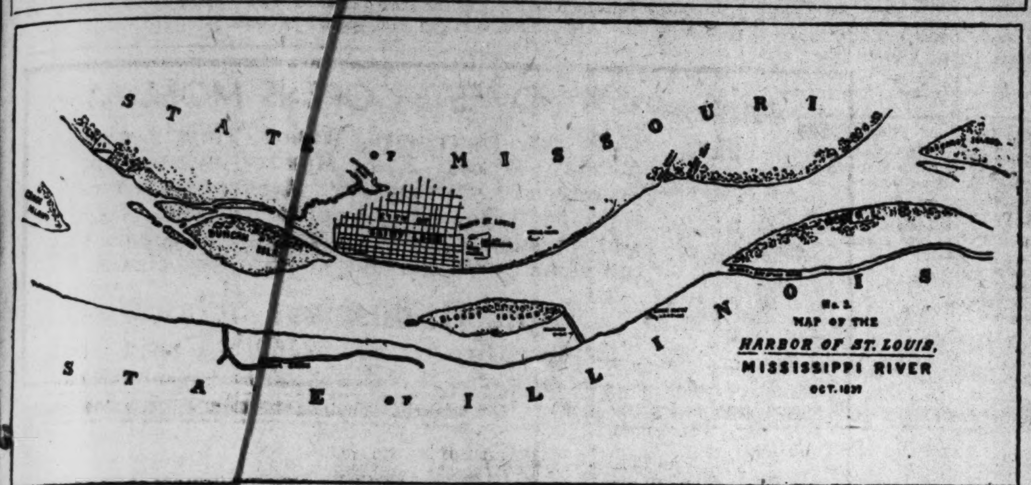
Robert E. Lee's Map of Bloody Island, Duelling Ground



LIEUT. ROBERT E. LEE, United States Engineers, later military chief of the Confederacy, drew in 1837 this map of the St. Louis harbor, showing Bloody Island, opposite the city. Lieut. Lee was sent here in that year to preserve the St. Louis harbor and to prevent a threatened shift of the Mississippi channel which, it was feared, might remove the navigable river to the east side of Bloody Island, and leave St. Louis with a sandbar in front of it. Lieut. Lee recommended construction of a dike from the head of the island to the Illinois shore, and in a two-year stay here, began the work. This in time resulted in joining Bloody Island to the Illinois mainland, and it is now the location of East St. Louis freight warehouses.

St. Louis Duels; Stories Of 13 Encounters Here Told By McCune Gill

Dr. Farrar, for Whom Street Is Named, Fought First One in 1810—Bloody Island Scene of Many Meetings.

A REVIEW of "St. Louis Duels," with details of 13 such encounters occurring here in a little more than a half-century, was presented by McCune Gill, specialist in St. Louis historical research, before the Missouri Historical Society at Jefferson Memorial Friday night.

A chart showed the location of Bloody Island, in the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis, its lower end opposite the present downtown center. Bloody Island no longer exists as an island, having been joined to the East St. Louis mainland as the result of a dike built by Lieut. Robert E. Lee of the United States Engineers, later commanding General of the Confederate Army. It still is sometimes called "the Island" by employes of the East Side railroads, which have their freight warehouses in that region.

Farrar-Graham Duel of 1810.

The duel of Dr. Bernard G. Farrar, first American practicing physician in St. Louis, and James A. Graham, a young lawyer, in 1810, was the first conflict described by Gill. Dr. Farrar's brother-in-law, an army officer, had been accused by Graham of cheating at cards. Dr. Farrar was drawn into the case as second for his brother-in-law, though the physician and Graham were friends. When the original challenger failed to appear, Dr. Farrar felt obliged, under the dueling code, to act for him. Both he and Graham were wounded, but Dr. Farrar's wound was slight. Graham's wound was serious, and Dr. Farrar, attending him professionally, pulled him through for the time, but he died about a year later. Farrar street, in North St. Louis, once was a road running through the country home of the physician, who resided in St. Louis many years.

Benton-Lucas Meetings.

This experience did not keep Dr. Farrar from taking part, as attending surgeon, in the historically famous duel in 1817 between Thomas H. Benton and Charles Lucas. The quarrel of the two, in the courts and in politics, was related by Gill, who continued:

"One of Benton's seconds was Luke E. Lawless, subsequently associated with Benton in securing confirmation by the Government of Spanish land claims, one of which resulted in the attempt by Benton and Lawless to impeach Judge Peck; another of his seconds was Maj. Pilcher. Lucas had as his seconds Col. Clemson and Joshua Barton, a lawyer, who was later to fight a duel of his own.

"The result of this encounter was the wounding of Lucas. Benton, however, refused to be satisfied with this outcome, and demanded a second battle, which was fought at a distance of 10 feet, resulting in the death of Lucas and the wounding of Benton."

On Bloody Island in 1823.

Joshua Barton's duel with Thomas C. Rector, on Bloody Island in 1823, resulted from a newspaper article written by Barton, then United States District Attorney here, calling attention to the action of William Rector, United States Surveyor-General, in appointing several of his relatives as deputy surveyors. Thomas Rector took up his brother's quarrel, challenged Barton, and killed him. Joshua Barton's brother, David Barton, became, with Benton, one of Missouri's first Senators.

Two lesser-known persons, alphonse Stewart and William Bennett, went to Belleville to fight their duel in 1820. The seconds agreed to put no bullets in the pistols, but Bennett, learning of this dropped a bullet into his pistol and killed Stewart. Such was the public disapproval of his conduct that, the speaker related, Bennett was indicted for murder, convicted and hanged.

Deady Biddle-Pettis Fight.

The deadly Biddle-Pettis duel in 1831, Gill related, was occasioned by the controversy over the closing of the United States Bank, in President Jackson's administration. Pettis, a pro-Jackson member of Congress, wrote an article attacking the president of the bank, Nicholas Biddle of Philadelphia. The matter was taken up by Maj. Thomas Biddle, paymaster at Jefferson Barracks, who attempted to horsewhip Pettis. Pettis issued a challenge and Biddle, who was near-sighted, fixed the distance between them at five feet, the parties to stand back to back, and at the count of three to turn and fire. Both were killed. Maj. Biddle's widow, Ann Biddle, left valuable real estate to charities, including St. Ann's Hospital.

Another near-sighted recipient of a challenge, Thomas C. Reynolds, fixed the distance at ten paces, in his duel with B. Gratz Brown, later Governor of Missouri and vice-presidential nominee, in 1857. Like most difficulties of the time, this one arose over the slavery question. Ferdinand Kennett and Isaac H. Sturgeon were among the assistants in this duel, which was fought on the Illinois side of the river, about 50 miles south of St. Louis. Brown was wounded.

John S. Marmaduke Victor.

John S. Marmaduke of St. Louis, Confederate Army officer and later Governor of Missouri, killed his superior officer, one Gen. Walker, in a duel near Little Rock, Ark., in 1863, after a dispute over dispositin of troops in that state. The stipulations in this duel were that the parties should stand ten paces apart, back to back, and at the signal should turn and advance toward each other, firing. Marmaduke's second shot felled Walker.

Gen. D. M. Frost, later commander of Camp Jackson, and Edward B. Sayers, engineer who planned that camp, met on Bloody Island in 1860. Sayers fired first, missing Frost, who then fired in the air.

Other affairs, some of them with happy endings, described by Gill, were the challenge of John Scott to Charles Lucas, their quarrel being settled without a duel; the Geyer-Kennerly duel, in which Kennerly was slightly wounded, and which prefaced a warm friendship; the Ramsay-Martin duel between army officers, Capt. Ramsay dying from his wound; the Weddell-Mitchell duel, both killed; the Lelong-Tates duel, Lelong being slightly wounded; the Heisterhagen-Kibbe duel with swords, Kibbe being slashed in the face; and the quarrel of Frank P. Blair, later Senator, with Loring Pickering, editor, who challenged Blair, but insisted on naming the conditions—a running fight with bowie knives or a pistol battle at Fourth and Pine streets. As the challenged person had the right to name the conditions, Blair scorned the suggestion, and the feud died down.

What Killed the Practice.

A law against dueling, passed by the Missouri Legislature in 1822, was ineffective, Gill said, and a statute enacted in 1835 had little more effect. But the constitutional convention of 1863 wrote a section of the Constitution, which is still in that document, providing that no person, who should hereafter fight a duel, or act as second, or accept or carry a challenge, or agree to go out of the State to fight a duel, could hold any office in the State.

"Thus," said Gill, "ended ignobly the gallant practice of the duel. Always largely a bombastic gesture of vainglorious politicians, it could not survive this devastating constitutional provision. To an office-holding partisan, chancing the loss of one's life might be considered of little consequence, but losing one's job was an entirely different matter."

Of those discharged in the court of criminal correction 122 were freed by the court after evidence was heard, five were certified to juvenile court, 78 were dismissed when the charges were forwarded to the grand jury, 30 were dismissed on account insufficient evidence, 23 were freed when the state failed to find necessary witnesses, two defendants were returned to other states, two married prosecuting witnesses, 11 remained at large when sheriffs failed to serve warrants, five defendants were turned over to St. Louis County and five charges were abated by death of defendants.

RECEIVER IS SOUGHT FOR $600,000 ESTATE

Son and Two Daughters of Late Robert W. Walsh File Court Action.

A motion was filed in Circuit Judge Hamilton's court yesterday by the son and two daughters of Robert W. Walsh, architect, asking that the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. be appointed as receiver of the $600,000 estate of their father.

The estate is now in charge of Mrs. Grace Walsh, widow; Marion C. Early, an attorney, and the Lafayette-South Side Bank & Trust Co., named as executors and trustees under the will of Mr. Walsh, who died in 1928.

Joseph Renard, attorney for the petitioners, said the motion is supplemental to a suit recently filed in which his clients asked for the removal of Early and the Lafayette-South Side Bank. It was alleged they failed to sell certain securities in the estate for the purpose of reinvesting the proceeds. Renard said that as a result of this failure to make the change in investments the estate suffered a substantial loss.

In the motion it is set forth that the bank trustee has in its possession securities and money totaling $41,000, part of which should be distributed among the heirs. All of the parties interested in the distribution, it is alleged, have agreed on the method of dividing the fund, and plaintiffs have made demand for their respective shares, but the bank and Early have refused to distribute the fund pending determination of the issues contained in the original petition.

It is pointed out by petitioners that years may elapse before the matters in controversy are finally adjudicated.

Mrs. Walsh, the motion recites, is a resident of California and is not able or equipped to properly administer the trust. One reason for the refusal of the bank to distribute the fund in question, according to petitioners, is based on the alleged refusal of Mrs. Walsh to come to this city to assist her co-trustees in withdrawing securities from a safe deposit box and to execute checks. Accordingly unless all of the trustees are removed, the motion sets forth, the beneficiaries will suffer serious and irreparable loss and injury.

The motion states that the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. has agreed to act as receiver or trustee. The motion was set for hearing Feb. 8. It was filed in behalf of Robert P. Walsh, Mrs. Alfred A. Meyer and Mrs. David Curlander.

Recently the Lafayette-South Side was reorganized as the Manufacturers' Bank & Trust Co., but the Walsh estate is still carried in the name of the original corporation, which has not been dissolved. The trust company several weeks ago asked leave to resign as trustee in the Walsh estate and that a receiver be appointed to handle the estate, but later dismissed its petition.

Early said so far as he knew the investments of the trust had been carefully checked. He knew of no method, he said, of determining when prices of securities are at their best and should be sold.

YOUTH ACCIDENTALLY SHOOTS ANOTHER TRYING OUT HOLSTER

James Coleman, 19, Wounded When Revolver Is Discharged Inadvertently.

James Coleman, 19 years old, 2603A Howard street, was shot accidentally last night when a revolver held by Robert Galloway, 16, was discharged. Coleman was wounded in the abdomen and right index finger.

Coleman and Galloway, who lives in the flat beneath Coleman, told police Galloway had made a holster for Coleman's revolver, and took it to Coleman last night to see how the weapon fitted it. In some manner the weapon was discharged.

ROOSEVELT BIRTHDAY DINNER HERE TUESDAY

Several Hundred Reservations at Coronado; Benefit Dance at Arcadia.

Several hundred reservations have been received for the dinner at the Coronado Hotel Tuesday night which will commemorate the fifty-second anniversary of President Roosevelt's birth.

Tickets are being sold also for a dance to be held the same night at the Arcadia ballroom. The program at each gathering will be interrupted at 10:15 p. m. to enable those present to listen to the President's radio address.

Net proceeds of the two parties will be donated to the Warm Springs Foundation, which maintains the Georgia health resort for the development of which Roosevelt is largely responsible.

The dinner at the Coronado will cost $3 a plate, of which the management expects to donate at least $1.25 to the foundation. Ninety per cent of the money taken in at the dance, for which an admission of $1 is to be charged, will go to the foundation.

Samuel W. Fordyce, attorney, will serve as toastmaster at the dinner. Entertainment will be provided by local theaters.

The celebration is planned to be non-political, and anyone who desires may attend the dinner or dance. John J. Nangle is chairman of a committee arranging the dinner and James A. Waechter, president of the Board of Election Commissioners and Dewey S. Godfrey, chairman of the Democratic City Committee, are in charge of the dance. Headquarters for the committee are in room 206 at the City Hall.

TWO GANGSTERS TAKEN IN RAID ON EAST SIDE ARE ARRAIGNED

Bond for "Blackie" Arms and James Kenney Is Fixed at $10,000 Each.

"Blackie" Arms and James Kenney, Shelton gang associates, arrested Friday in a raid on a house at 704 North Forty-first street, East St. Louis, were arraigned before Justice of Peace Wangelin at Belleville, yesterday, and bond fixed at $10,000 each.

Preliminary hearings were set for Feb. 6. Arms is charged with possession of fictitious automobile license plates and carrying concealed weapons; Kenney with possession of the license plates and vagrancy. Minnie and Ruth Kirksey, sisters, arrested at the same address, are charged with vagrancy, with bond set at $1000 each.

Special Deputy Sheriff Joseph Schrader and other officers who raided the house found a machine gun drum loaded with 250 cartridges, a high-powered rifle, two automatic pistols and loaded clips for the pistols. An extra set of license plates was found in an automobile said to have been used by Arms and Kenney. Several alleged hangouts of the Shelton gang in St. Clair County have been raided recently by deputy sheriffs.

SALT WATER TRAINING CRUISE

Naval Reservists Expect to Visit Cuba.

If tentative plans develop, St. Louis Naval Reservists will make their next summer's training cruise on salt water, instead of Lake Michigan.

According to the proposal, the St. Louis group would travel by rail to New Orleans, there to board a navy vessel for a two weeks' cruise, including a stop at Havana, Cuba. There are a limited number of vacancies in the organization, which meets every Thursday evening at the armory at the foot of Ferry street.

CWA PAYROLL IN CITY AND COUNTY $559,000

Total of $3,490,000 Given Out in Wages Since Program Was Launched Dec. 1.

A CWA payroll of $559,427 in St. Louis and the county last week brought to $3,490,310 the total that has been paid in wages since the program began about Dec. 1.

In the city 24,900 CWA employes were paid $439,027, and in the county 8400 workers got $120,400. The county payroll was about $14,000 more than the previous week, because 1800 highway workers were paid last Tuesday for work done the previous week. The combined city and county payroll, however, was about 6 per cent less than the week before, because of the reduction in working hours.

This reduction, from 30 to 24 hours a week, was ordered by Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins to conserve CWA funds until an additional appropriation is made by Congress. Its full effects will appear in this week's payroll, which is expected to be about 20 per cent less than that of a week ago.

SPECIAL ATTORNEY-GENERAL HAS NOTABLE WAR RECORD

Col. Carl L. Ristine Led Advance in Argonne; Now Handling Mail Contract Proceedings.

Col. Carl L. Ristine of Lexington, Mo., appointed recently as Special United States Attorney-General to conduct any legal proceedings which may develop from the Senate investigation of air and ocean mail contracts, demonstrated his qualities as a fighter when, at the age of 32, he led the 139th Infantry, Thirty-fifth Division, against the Germans in the Argonne offensive.

In the general shuffling of officers in the Thirty-fifth Division before the Missouri troops entered the Argonne, the Colonel assigned to the 139th arrived too late for the attack. Ristine, the Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, took command. Despite the untimely fog, which caused considerable confusion at the outset, Ristine kept his outfit clear and, by a deft encircling maneuver, "pinched out" the German defenses at Varennes.

The outfit went forward, and, when Lieutenant-Colonel Ristine became worried over the morale of his men, he took charge of the skirmish line and led the way. After cleaning up Vauquois Hill and the Bois de Rossignol, the 139th, led by Ristine, made the farthest advance accomplished by Thirty-fifth Division troops in the Argonne. For his leadership and daring, Ristine was promoted to Colonel.

POPE WARNS AGAINST COMMUNISM, PROTESTANTISM

Also Includes Materialism, Paganism and Atheism in Things to Avoid.

By the Associated Press.

VATICAN CITY, Jan. 27.—Pope Pius delivered a warning today against Materialism, Paganism, Atheism, Communism and Protestantism to an audience of 300 Holy Year pilgrims from South America.

"There are many perils," said the pontiff, "in the spirit of Communism, Materialism, and Atheism which attempt to penetrate the soul of the family and lead it to destruction."

He said Protestant proselytism was particularly dangerous because "while it does not succeed in destroying faith, it generates an indifference which produces so much bad in the spirit and annuls the precious treasure of Christian life."

$1,000,000 GOAL FOR TOMORROW IN RELIEF DRIVE

Solicitors to Hold Fourth Report Meeting in Campaign — Committee of 100 Functioning.

The fourth report meeting of United Relief Campaign solicitors will be held at Hotel Statler tomorrow, opening the second week of the drive to raise $3,500,000 for 91 agencies of the Community Fund, Catholic Charities and the Jewish Federation.

No reports have been submitted since Friday, when the total of contributions was announced as $872,689, or 24 per cent of the goal. Campaign leaders were confident that week-end solicitations would push the total well beyond the $1,000,000 mark.

Arnold G. Stifel, campaign chairman, said the results last week of efforts by the Committee of 100 in the larger subscriptions division had been most encouraging. This committee of business and professional men, headed by Ethan A. H. Shepley, was organized to review the contributions made through the larger subscriptions division with the purpose of aiding donors in determining whether their gifts bore a proper relation to the gifts of others, and the total sought. He mentioned that since the committee began to function there have been several requests for the return of subscription cards for reconsideration of gifts before they were submitted to the committee.

Informal reports of unusual gifts continued to reach campaign headquarters. One concerned a widow on the relief rolls who gave a dollar out of a small fund of insurance money she received recently. Another solicitor reported he had obtained $1.50 from a widow who supports three children by taking in washing and who told him she had been saving 10 cents a week to make the gift. One contributor doubled his $25 gift of last year, explaining that relatives whom he had been helping were now self-supporting.

William T. Nardin, chairman of the board of the Chamber of Commerce, will speak in behalf of the campaign during the Community Forum period on radio station KSD at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon. Isaac A. Hedges will speak over KMOX at noon and at 9 p. m. there will be a talk in the interests of the campaign by Louis E. Miller on KSD.

EX-KAISER CELEBRATES HIS 75TH BIRTHDAY

Entertains at Doorn and Receives Many Messages and Gifts.

By the Associated Press.

DOORN, The Netherlands, Jan. 27.—Thousands of gifts and messages poured in upon Wilhelm II today. It was the former German Kaiser's seventy-fifth birthday.

Hand-embroidered pillow cases, bookmarks, paintings, books, knitted work and other tokens of affection were showered upon him in a manner unequaled on previous birthdays. More telegrams and congratulatory letters, too, were reported than in other years.

The day began with the congratulations of his friends and relatives. Then came the service in which the Rev. Ludwig Schneller declared that "only the imperial crown is missing from the third Reich."

A dinner tonight was attended by a few old Dutch friends, besides Marshal August von Mackensen, guests from other royal families, and Wilhelm's immediate family. It was a full dress affair, and the aged former Monarch wore the uniform of a field marshal.

After the divine services Wilhelm placed flowers in the room of his first wife, the late Queen Augusta Victoria.

At the luncheon the Margrave of Mesissen, the son of the late King of Saxony, proposed "his Majesty's health." The former Kaiser acknowledged with a bow.

Among the guests also were the former Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm, the Duchess of Hesse, Wilhelm's only surviving sister, the Grand Duke Frederick Francis of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and other children and grandchildren of Wilhelm.

The Rev. Dr. Schneller spoke at a small service attended by old friends and relatives. "Wilhelm is like a wanderer who stands upon the summit of God that is immune to any storm," he said. "From this summit he sees the dawn of a new era for Germany. The German people have been unified and they again remember their history and recall what part the Hohenzollerns played in that history.

"The new Reich structure has complied until it is almost to the top, so only that its peak—the imperial crown—is missing."

Bulging mailbags that taxed the facilities of the Doorn Postoffice brought the messages. Motor trucks appeared laden with flowers and the other tributes. Wilhelm's family presented him with a number of rare pine trees for his gardens.

WEISENBURGER ATTACKS STATE SCHOOL SYSTEM

St. Louis Chamber of Commerce President Declares Aim Is More Money Instead of More Education.

Walter B. Weisenburger, president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, discussed the finances of Missouri's school system in his speech to the Chamber at its annual dinner at Hotel Jefferson Thursday night. He based his statements on a study, in progress for nearly a year under the Chamber's direction.

His conclusion was that counties and local taxing units had not done their proper part, and that underpaid or unpaid teachers were "victims of a system conducted by professional school people that is wrong; a system that plans not particularly for more education, but for more money; a school machine that is as much political as educational."

Partial Text of Speech.

The section of Weisenburger's speech relating to the state's schools, not published in previous news accounts of the dinner, and published now because of its statewide interest, was in part:

"At considerable risk of being misunderstood by those who honestly think that more money means more education, I am going to talk about the Missouri school situation.

"I know that education has been cleverly rendered a sacrosanct subject—that it's rank heresy to go back of school expenditures to find out if the taxpayer is getting his money's worth.

"'It's for the children,' but some of the 'kids' that eventuallly get it look a little aged!

"You might say: 'Well, why should St. Louis be concerned about what the out-state spends on education?' Because, when the local units fall down and go to the Legislature for state help, about half of that state help has to be paid by St. Louis.

"'Do you mean that St. Louis should not pay?' 'Not at all. We should. It is St. Louis' clear obligation to help out-state schools.

How City Has Cut Expenses.

"Why all the fuss, then?' St. Louis pays for her own schools. The State pays only 5 per cent. St. Louis has cut her school expense by $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 in hard times. Isn't it manifestly unfair for the state system to expect St. Louis to pay its losses, unless they have made similar attempts at economy and modernization?

"Your Chamber of Commerce has spent the greater part of a year in making a detailed study of the Missouri school system. We have deliberately withheld it until the State Legislature took care of the emergency school appropriations. The schools got $657,000 in appropriations and one third of the sales tax, estimated at $2,121,000, one third of the liquor revenue, estimated at $800,000, a possible total additional money for schools of $3,578,000.

$56,000,000 Institution.

"So much capital has been made of the 4.5 per cent school teachers' wages unpaid; of the 22 per cent of unemployed—both much less than in industrial lines—that Missourians picture their school system as a pauperized affair. The poor schools of Missouri are a $56,000,000 institution—by far the largest of all tax-supported projects in the state.

"Business turnover in the state dropped 45 per cent in the five years ending with 1932-33; Missourians' income was cut in half; but Missouri public schools spent nearly $55,000,000 a year during that period—35 per cent more than in the previous five years!

"Has more money meant more education? Well, 1930 school expenses were 98 per cent higher than in 1920. In the same time, there had been a decrease of 16,410 in enrollment. School expense increased 98 per cent in ten years and enrollment decreased in the same period.

Blames Local Taxing Unit.

"The fall-down is not with the state. It is with the local taxing unit.

"Not only has Missouri suffered from tax delinquency and the reduction of rate and assessment, but from a grievous error that the school bloc pulled in the 1931 Legislature.

"This 1931 law set the minimum levy in rural districts to get state aid at 20 cents. Many counties had been up to a 55 cent rate. In 45 counties recently surveyed, the rate for school purposes has been cut an average of 15 per cent. But, don't think this was always a saving to the taxpayer! No sir, taken off schools, but left on the county rate to pay county expenses. On top of this, 59 counties reduced their assessment 26 per cent.

"But worst of all, the school lobby in the 1931 law, adopting the revenue suggestions of the Gary Commission, tried to set up $12,000,000 a year state aid for schools. As passed, the law was amended to read 'available revenue.'

"The state school system has chosen to disregard that word 'available' entirely, referring to the unpaid portion as the 'state's legal obligation' to the counties.

"These presumptive totals—to be distributed only if available—are used to agitate honest, sincere friends of the schools into a frenzy of protest.

"To show you there is no modesty in their respect for more, more, the state's general revenue in 1932 was but $10,744,832. If the revenue had been available, the schools, under the 1931 law, would have gotten $11,661,879. Any poorly paid school teacher will tell you you can't take 11 from 10.

Chance to Modernize Schools.

"Missouri's school management has never made the slightest use of the state's new $260,000,000 road system by building better equipped, consolidated schools for rural children. Superintendent Russell of St. Louis County has just recently issued a report suggesting 16 consolidated schools instead of 90. Consolidation of districts, however, admittedly the modern trend to better education, instead of money-grabbing, has never been seriously attempted throughout the state.

"There are six districts in the state with only one pupil each; in which the private tutor for one pupil costs about $568 yearly. There are 12 districts with two pupils; 37 with three; and so on. In all, there are 4714 districts, about half in the state, with not enough pupils or enough assessed value to justify a school. Larger districts, using the good roads, would overcome this.

"No suggestion has come from these bureaucratic officials that the 1931 law be treated as written — available revenue—no proposal that the 1931 school law should be replaced with one which will supply the state funds only to those districts which first provide the proper local funds and arrange the needed consolidations."

Closing Time for Foreign Mails.

Parcel post for Germany and Great Britain and full European mails will close at 9 o'clock tomorrow night, at the main postoffice, Eighteenth and Walnut streets.

SEEKS DISTRIBUTION OF SKOURAS EMPLOYES' FUND

Thornton W. Sargent Jr. Asks for Court Order Disposing of $18,000.

Suit was filed in Circuit Court yesterday by Thornton W. Sargent Jr., asking for an order for distribution of $18,000 belonging to the Skouras Employes' Mutual Aid Association Fund. Sargent is a former employe of the Skouras Super Theaters Corporation.

According to the petition, the fund was established in 1931 by contributions and assessments of employes of the Missouri, Ambassador and Grand Central theaters and by other means, including a charge of 10 cents on all passes issued. The money was to be used to establish a gymnasium for employes and for other beneficial purposes.

Sargent says the gymnasium project was abandoned and no steps have been taken to administer the fund while the company has been involved in receivership proceedings.

It is asked that the First National Bank, depository of the fund, pay the money to a receiver for distribution to those entitled to receive the proceeds. The petition names as defendants Charles P. Skouras, J. Reeves Espy, Collins Espy, F. H. Laurent, J. W. White and H. J. Tondrau as trustees.

Here's what a Famous Racing Driver says about

The NEW FORD V·8

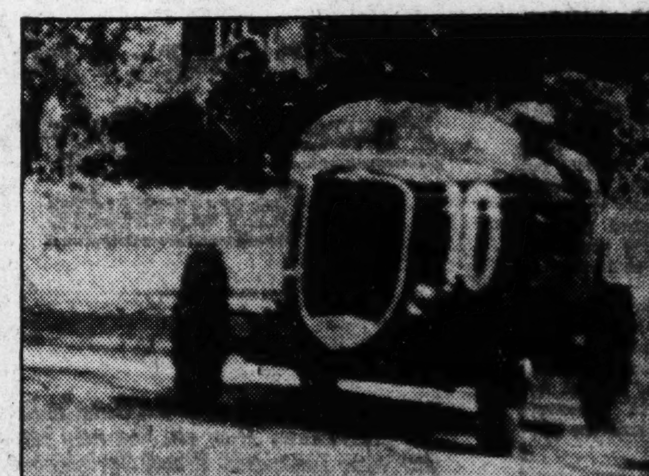
"I PICKED a Ford V-8 for the 1933 Stock Car Race at Elgin and I thought it was a great car when it brought me home in front. It takes a lot of automobile to average 80.22 miles an hour for 200 miles over a course like that.

"When I heard that the 1934 Ford V-8 was even better than the 1933 job I was just a little doubtful. It just didn't seem possible, but I thought I'd find out.

"I could see it was better-looking, but I wasn't much interested in that. The thing a racing driver looks at is the engine. How does it sound? How is it built? How fast will it go? How does it stack-up on gas and oil?

"So I took it out on the road and opened it up. It held the road like a veteran and the way that speedometer touched the top numbers was something to talk about. If I'd had that car in the Elgin race I'd have averaged closer to 90 than 80.

"You can put me down as saying this New Ford V-8 is going to go places in 1934. It's a sweet job all the way through and that new dual carburetion system is going to save you a lot of money on gasoline."



Fred Frame winning 1933 Elgin Road Race in Ford V-8

BRITON'S SON WINS RHODES SCHOLARSHIP

H. W. Jones, Webster Groves, Has Worked His Way Through School.

When Harry Willmer Jones of Washington University goes to Oxford this fall as the first Rhodes scholar from St. Louis in four years, he won't be far away from Sutton, a small town just outside of London, which his father, Harry Jones, left when he was 11 years old to sail around the world.

The father, descendant of an old English sea-faring family, spent the years between 11 and 16 at sea and has, in the intervening time, visited foreign countries. The son, a senior in law school, has crowded more than the usual amount of formal education into his 22 years. The Jones family lives at 308 South Forest avenue, Webster Groves.

The father is an employe in the machine shop of the John E. Mitchell Co. Work is slack there, and that gave him time to come out and talk, which, like any good sea-faring man, he likes to do.

Experience vs. College Degree.

"Am I sorry I didn't go to college?" he said. He was dressed in overalls and blue shirt and sat on the desk in the shipping room. "No, not now. Of course, I couldn't have at the time, anyway. But the road of experience is a good one, except that it's long.

"A man learns a lot by knocking around, but an education will take a man places where others can't get. And a formal education gives a man an outline of all knowledge. Another man won't know where to start. You'll say he can go to a library and ask the librarian what books he should read. But I've known some librarians that haven't had a grammar school education."

The father's first sea voyage was from Cardiff, Wales, to Melbourne, Australia, and then back to England around Cape Horn. That was in a three-masted bark and took 15 months. Soon afterward he went around the world again and finally landed in Boston. There he married a girl from Prince Edward Island, whose family had also followed the sea. Later, as engineer for a railroad, he spent much time in Central America. He is very fond of poetry—Masefield, Byron and Shelley.

Boy Wins Scholarship.

Harry Willmer Jones has always had to work, too, while attending school and college. While going to Webster Groves High School he sold shoes at night, worked at grocers' shops on Saturdays. He got a year's scholarship to Westminster College because he ranked first in a debating tournament there. The second year at Westminster he got his meals by waiting on table and earned his tuition by coaching the girls' debating team at William Woods College.

That was "very enjoyable" and he was paid well. He also won minor debating and public speaking prizes.

After two years at Westminster he transferred to Washington University Law School. The first year he worked at night at the Y. M. C. A. from 5 until 11 o'clock. He got $30 a month, but carfare from and back to Webster Groves was 40 cents, and he had to buy his supper besides, so his father told him to quit.

At the end of the year he ranked his class at law school and received the Samuel Breckinridge prize of $50 and the Shepard Barclay scholarship of $500, which paid his tuition for the next two years. That year he also won the $50 Washington University Oratorical prize.

Now he edits the St. Louis Law Review and plans to take the bar examination before going to England. He doesn't take himself as seriously as do most boys who are forced to work their way through college. He doesn't mind having had to work. "The time probably would have been spent in having a swell time," he says.

"There is a lot to say for getting your education by experience," he said, "but I think one needs a little formal training—in economics and things like that." After Oxford he plans to return here to practice law—"that which pertains to the public interest."

SAN JOSE SHERIFF PRAISED

But Coroner's Jury in Verdict Says Members of Mob "Unknown."

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Jan. 27.—A Coroner's jury here today returned a verdict that Thomas H. Thurmond and Jack Holmes, lynched last Nov. 26, for the kidnaping and slaying of Brooke L. Hart, came to their deaths by "strangulation by hanging at the hands of a mob, the members of which are unknown to this jury."

The jury also praised Sheriff William J. Emig, who during the inquest underwent a grilling from attorneys representing the families of the lynched men. The jury found that Emig "used his best judgment in trying in every reasonable way to prevent the lynchings."

MRS. ROOSEVELT GIVES ADVICE TO PEN WOMEN

"Paint the Human Side of Experiences That People Are Going Through."

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Harold L. Ickes today gave some professional tips to the League of American Pen Women.

Said Mrs. Roosevelt, author of "It's Up to the Women":

"Look around at things that are happening and paint the human side of experiences that people are going through. I'd give anything to be able to portray the spirit of courage growing in America today. In my mail is material for many novels, some desperately sad; but some leaving the spirit of hopefulness—to find out what people can go through with, and come out of!"

Said Mrs. Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, who has written about Indians in Mesa land:

"Go to the Southwest and interpret almost an untouched literary field."

Later Mrs. Roosevelt told the National Conference on Public Housing:

"There is a chance to work out ways to clear slums and build low cost houses—but public opinion must make property owners realize their land is held for income purposes, and not to increase capital investment. When holders of property who exploit human beings are considered bad citizens in their community, we will get some where with this program."

Killed at Work in Mine.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Jan. 27.—Guy E. Tiffany, 28 years old, a coal miner, died here today from injuries received yesterday when he was struck by a falling boulder while at work in a mine 15 miles north of here.

PRUSSIAN PROTESTANTS PUT UNDER NAZI DICTATORSHIP

Reichsbishop Mueller Assumes Role Over 19,000,000 Communicants in State.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller set himself up as the spiritual dictator of 19,000,000 Prussian Protestants today in a decree designed to "safeguard order within the Protestant churches of Prussia."

The Bishop several weeks ago tried to assume a like role over all Protestants in Germany but that order aroused such a storm that he decided to limit his dictatorship to the larges German state, with the aid of its Premier, Reichsminister Goering.

Dr. Mueller ordered the suspension of all Prussian pastors who read a defiant declaration of secession from their pulpits Jan. 14.

Nazi sub-leaders of the Prussian United Church met in Bishop Mueller's office to promise support. The Prussian United Church includes the Lutheran and the Reformed churches.

Mueller temporarily suspended the Church senate and assumed the right to issue orders to the Supreme Prussian Church Council.

George Bernard Shaw will be the speaker in the "Whither Britain?" series the afternoon of Feb. 6.

Gertrude Stein's Opera to Go on Air.

THE premiere of Gertrude Stein's opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," will be broadcast from Hartford, Conn., by the CBS chain Thursday night, Feb. 8. Virgil Thompson composed the music. The libretto is in Gertrude Stein's peculiar style. While the words seem to most persons who have attended rehearsals to be generally meaningless, they are said to be always rhythmic and well adapted for singing. Incidentally, there are 30 saints instead of three in the opera and four acts instead of three. Because of Thompson's assertion that Negro voices are better suited to the fanciful and religious moods of the opera, the seven leading roles will be sung by Negroes and the two large mixed choruses will be made up of Negroes. Their faces will be silvered.

Byrd Broadcasts Will Be Continued.

ALTHOUGH voice reception from the Byrd Expedition has been none too satisfactory, the Associated Press reports that the two-way programs will be continued despite rumors. Getting the expedition's land transmitter, KFZ, into operation is expected to result in material improvement in the programs. KFZ's aerial is directional, and, so, should be more efficient than that used on the ship. This transmitter uses 1000 watts power. It has been erected at Byrd's winter base.

New Crosley Moderne Sets Shown by Dealers.

A COMPLETE new line of Crosley receivers called the "Moderne" was viewed by dealers Tuesday at a meeting at the Coronado Hotel. The meeting was held by the Glasco Electric Co., distributer, and addresses were made by H. E. Richardson, assistant to the president of the Crosley Radio Corporation; D. R. Cohen, preisdent of the Glasco Co.; John R. Steele, sales manager of the firm; Jack Priesmeyer, of the National Carbon Co., who discussed the "air-cell" battery for battery sets, and Howard Souther, of the Crosley Corporation.

The new receivers range from four-tube superheterodyne for AC or DC operation to five-tube, six-tube, seven-tube and 10, 12 and 14-tube models.

In style all are of moderne design, yet not extravagantly so. They are styled simply yet in accord with the trend toward modernity in decoration.

A number of the new Crosley receivers, at the turn of a switch, will tune in regular broadcasts or such short wave broadcasts as those from police transmitters, radio amateurs, airports and airplanes and ships at sea.

All models have dynamic speakers. The 14-tube model has four '45 type tubes in the final audio stage for exceptional tone and plenty of volume. Dual tuning range, meter tuning, static control, tone control and an auditorium-size peaker are features.

All the receivers are unusually powerful and selective for their types and number of tubes, and all are housed in cabinets made attractive by use of fine woods and moderne tsyling.

Flow of Funds From Abroad Continues—Dollar Inclined to Rise Moderately Despite Active Selling of Dollar by Treasury Agent.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—The security and commodity markets, after the substantial advances of the previous week, leveled off and trading slackened. Traders evidently felt that the markets needed a rest while time out was called to appraise the business outlook, in the light of new developments in Washington.

The flow of funds from abroad continued, and despite active selling of dollars by the Federal Reserve, acting for the Treasury, the dollar was inclined to rise moderately. But acceptance of the administration's gold bill, setting up the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, appeared assured toward the end of the week.

Corporate news was largely favorable. General Motors, which earned nothing on its common stock in 1932, reported 1933 net of $1.72 a share. Pennsylvania Railroad ordered a 50-cent dividend, as it did a year ago, and Norfolk & Western ordered a $2 extra.

Freight carloadings showed a small increase, although the normal seasonal tendency would have been downward. Electric power production, however, showed a contraseasonal decline, and steel ingot output slipped back a little.

Government Financing.

The terms of the Treasury billion-dollar financing, half of which was in 2½ per cent 13½-month obligations, and the remainder in 1½ per cent 7½-month notes, were regarded as attractive by banks and investment institutions, and the total amount was nearly five times oversubscribed. Bankers suggested that the Treasury evidently felt that it would find conditions more favorable for long-term financing after business recovery had made further progress, and the future of the dollar and the price level was more clearly defined. In the meantime, it could avail itself of the plethora of short-term funds which are still wary of long-term commitments.

Trading in bonds continued in substantial volume, the turnover for the week reaching nearly 100,000,000, par value in the Stock Exchange, or within little more than $20,000,000 of last week's 10-year record. The price index of 60 corporate issues advanced .4 of 1 point to 81.2, the best level since August. The price index of 90 shares rose .5 of a point to 87.4, a narrow change for that index.

In commodities, such staples as wheat, corn and cotton were virtually unchanged from last Saturday at the end of the week. Bar silver declined 1 cent an ounce.

Aircrafts in Flight.

Except for a strong demonstration in aircraft issues, the stock market was rather colorless at week-end session, so-called leaders were again affected by profit-taking, though it was absorbed at moderate concessions. The averages showed another small decline.

Aviation issues caught the speculative eye from the start; they have been going up at intervals recently, but this morning's rise was more vigorous. Trading apparently was stimulated by the war department general staff report recommending a five-year aircraft program covering 1000 new planes and enough money to modernize some of the existing equipment.

Wright Aero was the day's headliner. Up about 17 points yesterday it zoomed to 75, then lost all but seven points of an extreme 28-point advance. The stock, most of which is held by Curtiss Wright, trades in 10-share lots and markups of two or three points between the numerous transactions were frequent while the rise was on. At its best the stock show an appreciation of more than 50 points for the week. Its 1933-34 low was 6.

Sperry and Douglas aircraft rode the rally for extreme gains of better than a point. One 20,000-share block of Curtiss-Wright common changed hands; the stock's closing quotation was 4¼, up ⅜.

Tobaccos improved fractions to a couple of points, but otherwise the market tended to lag. American Telephone surrendered a one-point gain. Santa Fe, American Can, Corn Products, Union Carbide and Illinois Central lost in the neighborhood of a point. Bangor & Aroostook railroad apparently had discounted the $2.50 annual dividend basis on which directors established the shares, the increase of 50 cents yearly reflecting better earnings.

Two governmental reports, interested Wall Street. One was the interdepartmental committee's findings on communications; the other covered market regulation. It was noted that both reports had gone to Congress without benefit of White House recommendation, which led to the inference that if the President had wanted prompt action he would have requested it. Hence the prospect sof regulatory legislation on either matter at this session, which apparently is to confine itself chiefly to emergency questions, might seem to be rather remote.

Chief features of the communication report, including the majority's recommendation for private ownership and operation under Government regulation, had previously been touched on, so offered no element of surprise. Wire company shares were quiet. As for market regulation, the financial community had been anticipating that some sort of Federal license system might be suggested, and the report had more of a general than a specific nature.

Overnight news that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York had released $5,162,700 of foreign gold from earmark was interpreted as an exchange of metal held here for gold purchased by the bank abroad. The bank authorities gave no explanation of the earmark release. At the same time there were many conjectures as to the amount of gold which has been bought by America in London and Paris for the purpose of depressing international dollar rates.

COTTON CLOSES HIGHER IN WEEK-END TRADING

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Cotton was generally higher today on a bullish view of crop control proposals, relatively steady Liverpool cables, and the continued absence of selling pressure from the South.

May contracts after reacting from 11.23 to 11.18 sold up to 11.32 in the late trading and closed at 11.31, with the general market closing steady at net advances of 14 to 17 points.

The opening was of 5 to 7 points higher in response to the steadiness abroad and press reports from Washington concerning the proposals for legislative control of production.

Prices sagged a few points, but offerings tapered on the setback, and the market worked higher in the late trading on continued trade buying and covering. March sold from 11.04 to 11.17 while October advanced from 11.46 to 11.60. Closing quotations were within a point or two of the best, with May contracts showing recoveries of about 20 points from the low level of the week.

While the Washington news was generally interpreted as pointing to the probability of additional crop control measures, there was evidently a disposition in some quarters to await results from the questionnaire which has been sent out to sound sentiment among Southern growers.

Part of the buying on the advance was attributed to reports that a bill had been introduced in the Senate to authorize large purchases of cotton goods for distribution to the needy.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 172,000 bales against 191,000 last year.

WEEK'S METAL MARKET

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Difficulties in reaching an agreement on the copper code with NRA officials were followed by reactions of ⅛ to ¼ cent in electrolytic copper quotations this past week to the basis of 8¼ cents. With further conferences called in an attempt to reach solutions to such problems as the disposal of surplus stocks, said to be equal to two years' supply, consumers generally adopted a waiting attitude and quiet conditions have prevailed in the market.

A decline of $1 per ton in zinc at the opening of the week reflected disappointment over failure of mines to curtail despite the current relatively low ore price. However, reduced output is scheduled for Feb. 1. Consumers who had purchased more actively in the preceding week withdrew from the market and there was little feature to the light trading.

The lead market was also quieter but prices were unchanged. Recent active purchasing was said to have satisfied immediate requirements in some instances, but sellers hoped that a renewed demand would materialize when automobile production expands. Anticipated seasonal improvement from paint manufacturers and indications of interest from cable makers caused smelters to take a cheerful view.

Tin went to the lowest levels since November in sympathy with easier sterling. Although a little consumer buying developed at the decline, demand was generally restricted, owing to continued small tin plate mill operations. Prospects for orders from automobile manufacturers lent some encouragement, however.

A slightly easier undertone was reported for antimony as a result of continued indifference of buyers.

The decline in steel production schedules last week reflected continued absence of support from the heavy consuming branches, automobiles, railroads and construction. Orders were largely miscellaneous, with mills showing less inclination to produce for stocks. Finished prices were unchanged, although the possibility of an advance in sheet quotations was reported. Pig iron remained quiet and unchanged.

WRIGHT AERONAUTICAL, 29 7-8 THURSDAY; SELLS AT 75

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.— Neither Radio common in the last stages of the '29 boom, nor Mexican Petroleum in the post-war period of hectic speculation in the oil shares, behaved with any greater degree of the spectacular, than surrounds Wright Aeronautical at the moment. That stock closed on Thursday at 29⅞, scored a 17 point gain yesterday to close at 47, and soared today for a further gain of some 28 points to around 75. Dealt in on a ten-share basis, that stock, due to the limited floating supply, is immensely responsive to moderate volume of demand. Curtiss Wright Corp. owns 578,786 shares of the stock.

WHEAT MARKET IS WEATHER AFFAIR AT THE WEEK-END

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Grain prices worked gradually higher today on a weather market.

Trade was light and easily influenced. News from the southwestern winter wheat belt told of needed moisture and of forecasts for lower temperatuers, both threatening injury to the crop. The opening was slow, but later buying on the weather news was sufficient to pull quotations around a cent a bushel higher. Corn and oats firmed with wheat.

Wheat closed firm at the day's best prices and ¾ to 1¼ cent higher than Friday's finish. Corn was also firm and ¼ cent higher than Friday's finish. Corn was also firm and ¼ cent advanced, oats strong and ¼ to ⅜ up, with provisions 10 to 25 cents higher.

Continued dry weather in the winter wheat belt with forecasts of fair and colder in the Southwest attracted bullishly inclined traders early.

News that flour production at Minneapolis for the week ended Jan. 20 was the largest in several years with the exception of a brief period last July just before the adoption of the processing tax also served as a prop to the market.

Corn followed the action of wheat. There was flurry of selling early, attributed to Northwestern sources, but the market rallied on covering sales. Demand for cash corn was light.

Oats were also under the influence of wheat.

FURTHER EXPANSION IN LOCAL STOCK TRADE

Week Closes With Prices Generally Unchanged to Slightly Higher.

There was a further expansion of trading on the St. Louis Stock Exchange last week with prices, except in two or three instances, closing either unchanged or higher. On the larger turnovers the changes were not wide on the whole.

Wagner Electric and Rice-Stix, the two issues with largest sales, showed net losses. The larger part of the trade in latter issue was in one block in which the same broker was buyer and seller.

Brown Shoe sold up 3 points and International Shoe 2 on limited amounts. Fractional gains were made by Ely & Walker and National Candy. Stix, Baer & Fuller was unchanged.

BONDS TRENDLESS IN WEEK-END TRADE

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—The brief session of the bond market today was a trendless affair with the majority of issues holding to a small fractional range and what little profit-taking there was being absorbed without difficulty.

For the third consecutive day the average for 60 domestic corporate bonds closed unchanged at 81.2. On the week, however, this average was up four-tenths of a point. Sales totaled $7,476,000, par value, against $11,658,000 last Saturday.

Apparently there was little to stir the financial pulse in the Senate's approval of the administration's monetary bill. Loans of American Telephone, Postal Telegraph, International Telephone and Western Union also displayed little interest in publication of the communications report which was turned over to a Senate committee by the President.

The fact was that there was little new in the recommendations for the continuation of private ownership under Government regulation and the further permission to merge various communications systems. The tenor of the report was indicated several weeks ago.

Some of the more active rails improved moderately, including bonds of Santa Fe, Canadian pacific, Chicago & Alton, St. Paul, Illinois Central and Wabash. Mobile & Birmingham general 4s got up 5 points on a small turnover. Denver & Rio Grande 5s reacted 1½ points in relatively heavy trading. Loans of Missouri Pacific and Western Pacific were heavy.

Foreign obligations were quiet. Resignation of the Chautemps Cabinet seemingly failed to affect French bonds. The Republic's 7½s advanced slightly. Some of the Germans rallied, as did issues of Peru and Poland.

United States Government securities were almost at a standstill, transfers in this section amounting to only about $400,000. Price changes here were also without significance.

SCULLIN STEEL PLANT TO REOPEN FEB. 8

Four Hundred Men Will Be Employed at Start and 1000 or More Added Gradually.

The Scullin Steel Co., 6700 Manchester avenue, will reopen Feb. 8 employing 400 or 450 men, its president, Harry Scullin, said last night. The plant was closed last November because of operating losses.

Scullin said orders now on hand or in prospect were sufficient to require operation of the plant at 40 to 50 per cent capacity for several months. The force of workers, he said, would be expanded gradually to 1500 or 1800. When the plant closed it employed about 500 and a few years ago it employed as many as 3000.

Orders on hand, Scullin said, are for railroad materials to be used in reconstruction and new construction. Railroad materials for years have been the principal product of the plant, which is one of the largest steel mills in the Mississippi Valley.

REPRESENTATIVE HILL EXPLAINS TAX PLAN

(Copyright, 1934, by Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Representative Samuel B. Hill of Washington, chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee which drafted the proposals for the $200,000,000 general revenue bill, in an interview today gave out a statement explaining the revised income tax structure.

His statement:

"The general effect of the proposed changes in normal and surtax rates in the new revenue bill is to impose on individuals having incomes from salaries, business and wholly taxable interest practically the same tax burden as at present.

"On individuals having income from dividends and partially tax-exempt interest, however, the effect of the rate changes is to increase the present tax burden, although such individuals will still pay substantially less tax than is paid by those with the same amount of income from salaries, business and other forms of income which is subject to both normal and surtax.

Surtax Increased.

"The effects noted above are brought about by the very simple device of decreasing the normal tax and increasing the surtax. Since ordinary income, such as salary income and business income, is subject to both normal and surtax, it was found possible to decrease the normal tax and increase the surtax so that the final result would be substantially the same as at present.

"On the other hand, since dividends from the stock of domestic corporations and interest receipts from partially tax-exempt Government bonds are subject only to surtax, the result of raising the surtax rates increases the tax on this type of income, because the lowering of the normal tax has no compensating effect in this case.

"In addition to the rate changes noted above, the Committee on Ways and Means proposes to give a moderate earned income relief. This will help the small taxpayers with income from salary and it is hoped increase his purchasing power. Moreover, it is believed the tax on earned income should be somewhat less than on investment income. The relief in no case, however, can amount to more than $32, since not over $8000 is recognized as earned even if the actual amount of earned income is greater.

Earned Income Deduction.

"If a married man, after all allowable deductions, has a net income of $3000, he will be allowed an additional 10 per cent earned income deduction amounting to $300 and also a personal deduction of $2500, leaving a taxable income of $200 on which he will pay a tax of 4 per cent amounting to $8.

"The bill provides that the first $3000 of net income shall be conclusively presumed to be earned income, but the taxpayer may establish by proof an earned income up to $8000 on which he would be allowed a 10 per cent deduction.

"Gross income is the total income received during the taxable year. Net income is gross income less all allowable deductions such as business and operating expenses. Taxable income is net income less personal exemption and earned income deductions.

"On the whole, it is believed that the committee tax rate structure gives a distribution of the income tax burden which is more in accordance with the ability to pay of the taxpayer than the present rate structure."

TEACHER KILLED FROM AMBUSH

In Absence of Clue Kentucky Officers Send for Bloodhounds.

By the Associated Press.

MT. VERNON, Ky., Jan. 27.—Roscoe Morris, 38 years old, a school teacher, was shot and killed late today by a hidden marksman while Morris was working on the roof of a barn at his home in the Crooked Creek section of the county.

Morris fell back to the ground. There was no immediate clue to his attacker, and investigating officers sent for bloodhounds. The fatal shot evidently was fired from a woods nearby. Morris made his home with his mother, Mrs. Betty Morris.

MOTHER SEEKS PARDON FOR GROVER BERGDOLL

Writes to Roosevelt — Draft-Dodging Son Fugitive in Germany Since 1920.

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—Mrs. Emma C. Bergdoll, 72-year-old mother of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, notorious draft-dodger, has written a letter to President Roosevelt asking him to pardon her son as a part of the President's birthday celebration next Tuesday. Bergdoll is still a fugitive in Germany and Mrs. Bergdoll wants him to come home.

Grover's brother, Erwin, who served a four-year sentence for draft dodging, was among the 1500 persons whose citizenship was restored by President Roosevelt last Christmas, all of whom had served their sentences for law violations during the World War.

Mrs. Bergdoll, the widow of a wealthy Philadelphia brewer, says she is lonely without Grover and hopes the President will follow the practice of crowned heads who have issued pardons on their birthdays. She says Grover has three children whom she has never seen.

Bergdoll is now 40 years old, and has been living in Germany, so far as is publicly known here, since 1920. Grover's father left him a fortune, estimated as high as $1,000,000. He bought automobiles and airplanes and had many a brush with suburban police for his recklessness both in the air and on the ground before he gained notoriety as a draft dodger.

Grover Bergdoll was listed as a draft dodger in 1917 and later technically as an army deserter. He was hunted in the United States, Mexico and Canada, and was captured in Philadelphia in January, 1920. On a tip that he was in his mother's home in Wynnewood, Federal agents found him hiding full length in a window box. After a stubborn legan fight he was convicted by court-martial and sentenced to five years at Governor's Island, N. Y. His mother, when all legal recourse had been taken, was fined $279.

In March, 1920, Bergdoll told army officers a story about $100,000 in gold he buried in the Western Maryland mountains. Permission was granted to make a trip under army guard to the spot to recover the treasure. Bergdoll induced his guards to stop off in Philadelphia for a short visit to his mother. At a moment when his guards relaxed their vigilance, he escaped out a window and drove off in an automobile that was waiting for him.

Federal agents later found that he and his companion had gone to Canada and finally reached Eberbach, Germany. He could not be extradited. Two attempts were made to kidnap him. In the second attempt he is alleged to have shot to death one of his assailants. Bergdoll became a German citizen, married and settled down.

Economic Upturn in Europe; Sharp Drop in Jobless

Ten to 30 Pct. Reduction in Industrial Unemployment Compared with Figures of 1932.

By ALBIN E. JOHNSON,
A Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

GENEVA, Jan. 27.

AS the new year opens, unemployment, which has shown such a marked decline in the United States recently, has been reduced in the industrial countries of Europe from 10 to 30 per cent in comparison with what it was in the winter of 1932. Beginning last February-March-April when the economic depression was greatest, there has been a steady improvement in production, international trade (exports and imports), domestic commerce and employment.

A year ago there were more than 30,000,000 skilled workers idle in industrial countries. Today there are less than 20,000,000 and the ranks of the Army of Unemployed are steadily thinning. While the improvement in the United States may be largely due to acceleration of public works and artificial factors, Europe's recovery comes from normal economic causes.

The improvement is not confined to the so-called industrial nations either. "Europe's Farm Belt" which stretches from the Baltic to the Black Sea, and whose population of a hundred million is 80 per cent agrarian, reports that conditions have shown marked amelioration in the last six months. Since business always lags during the winter in agricultural communities the prospects for a seasonal pick-up in the spring are brighter today than they have been since the world's economic system collapsed in the autumn of 1929.

"When peasants are buying, industry is thriving," says an ancient Rumanian proverb, which still holds true in Central Europe.

Wide Extent of Revival.

In Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy and Sweden, factory fires which have been banked for at least three years are being rekindled. In Central Europe, Holland, Denmark and the Balkans, the peasant population is coming to life, due largely to the increased prices of farm and dairy products.

A comprehensive economic survey covering 33 countries has been made by the economic and financial sections of the League of Nations. The International Labor Office has canvassed the unemployment situation of more than 20 countries. The deductions of economists and statisticians are definite. They point to the probability that the gains recorded last summer and autumn were not merely seasonal. They have been maintained in nearly every case; in most countries the advances are continuing.

A glance over the import and export reports of 33 countries shows that 15 experienced gains (in some cases as high as 77.5 per cent) in both exports and imports during the last year. The comparisons are made with similar periods of 1932, or the second and third quarters of 1933.

Untabulated reports on the last quarter—October, November and December—of 1933, give even greater cause for hopefulness, especially in the realms of production and internal trade. Tariff barriers and other governmental prohibitions and restrictions, such as import quotas, etc., still exercise a strangling influence over international commerce.

Rise in Foreign Trade.

Countries where both imports and exports have gained appreciably include Great Britain, Belgium, Brazil, Argentina, Japan, Chile, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Latvia and Portugal.

Nine other countries—South Africa, Australia, Austria, Canada, France, India, Lithuania, Sweden and Switzerland—reported marked increase in imports (South Africa as high as 70.8 per cent), during the third quarter of 1933 as compared with the same period in 1932. Their exports suffered slight decreases.

Five countries—Holland, Italy, Norway, Poland and Rumania—saw only their exports increasing over the same period while Bulgaria, Czecho-Slovakia, Germany and Spain were still feeling the effects of the depression to the extent that neither their imports nor exports gained.

Czecho-Slovakia and Germany, however, staged a strong comeback during 1933 when railway car loadings increased 15 and 20.8 per cent respectively between April and August, and transport through German ports jumped nearly 28 per cent.

Statistics are usually difficult to translate graphically but a composite picture of the world's economic condition during 1929 and 1932, and finally those months of 1933 for

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN

By CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN, Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation by appointment of President Roosevelt, believes—as he has long believed—that the ultimate solution of the railroad problem lies in public ownership and operation.

His experience of 15 years on the Interstate Commerce Commission, where he has served on appointment of President Wilson and two Republican Presidents, has convinced him that public ownership and operation "theoretically and logically meets the known ills of the present situation better than any other remedy."

What these ills are he has set out in a voluminous report to the commission, which has transmitted it to the President, the Senate and the House. For the principal reason that the country is in no financial condition at present to stand the strain of acquiring the railroads, he does not at this time recommend their acquisition, but he accompanies his report with a "tentative plan" for Government ownership—a design, so to speak, for operation of the railroads with satisfactory service to the public and the fair prospect, at least, of earnings sufficient to meet all charges.

Under this plan, which Eastman offers as "merely a tentative outline intended to suggest some of the possibilities," the trustees who would be appointed to manage "The United States Railways" would be charged with the duty, so far as practicable, of fixing rates with a view to producing "net earnings sufficient to meet all charges, including bond interest and sinking-fund provisions." Surplus earnings would be used for acquiring new property or for retiring debt, at the discretion of the trustees. The amount of surplus earnings would be subject to no limitation except the discretion of the trustees. The Government would be obligated to meet any deficiency in earnings, but the repayment of appropriations for this purpose would be a charge on the future earnings of the railroads.

United States Railways.

The tentative plan—all contained in an appendix to Eastman's main report—provides for the ownership of the railroads by a Federal corporation chartered by special act of Congress, the stock to be nominal in amount and owned by the United States. The corporation would be named the United States Railways. Railroad properties would be acquired through bonds of this corporation guaranteed by the Government. (A method of acquisition through exchange of securities is described in a separate appendix by Leslie Craven.)

The United States Railways, as envisioned by Eastman, would be managed by a board of five, possibly seven, trustees appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate for terms of two, four, six, eight and ten years, respectively; reappointments to be for 10 years. The trustees would be removable only for cause and would receive the same salaries as justices of the United States Supreme Court.

The trustees would "serve under a declaration of trust solemnly worded, binding them to administer the properties with sole regard for the public interest, as efficiently and economically as possible, and without regard to any political party considerations."

The United States Railways would be conducted after the manner of a private corporation and upon a self-sustaining basis so far as possible. The trustees would have full control over all salaries and wages, subject to the complete right of organization and collective bargaining by the employes, and would be prohibited from employing, discharging, promoting or demoting any officer or employe at the solicitation of any public or political party officer.

Advisory Council of 24.

The trustees would have full power to subdivide properties for purposes of management and operation, and to create, if deemed advisable, subsidiary Federal corporations for these purposes.

There would be an advisory council of 24 unpaid members representing business, agriculture, labor and other specified interests. This council would be consulted by the trustees on such questions of general policy as either the council or the trustees might desire to have so considered. The advice of the council on specific matters would be published, and also the reasons of the trustees for failing to follow any such advice. The council would have the right to full information regarding the affairs of the United States Railways.

Taxes would be paid by the United States Railways, like any private corporation, to the Federal Government, and paid also to states and municipalities provided they agreed to uniform taxing provisions approved by the trustees.

At their discretion, the trustees would have the power to issue bonds of the United States Railways to provide for new construction or improvements, to buy the property of other transportation agencies, and to provide for debt maturities if no other funds were available for this purpose. Sinking funds would be provided for all bonds.

Relation to I. C. C.

The United States Railways would be freed of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, except over rates, accounting, certificates for new construction, and acquisition of other transportation agencies, but the commission would have no power to suspend changes in rates.

Subject to the approval of the commission, the United States Railways would have authority to acquire other agencies of transportation.

Eastman's report sets out the arguments against public ownership of the railroads as well as those on the other side. He frankly admits that there are "real dangers" in public ownership, as shown by the experience of other countries, but he believes that effective safeguards can be provided. He points out that there are hazards also in any private undertaking—a fact, he says, which has been amply proved by the history of American railroads.

If and when the time arrives for the Government to take over the railroads, he believes that the impelling motive will not be logic or theory, "but the practical one that private enterprise and capital will not be able to carry on successfully." This, he adds, has been the general experience."

A Public Industry.

After detailing the ills besetting the railroads under private ownership, he writes:

"Public ownership and operation of railroads is not inconsistent with our American theory of government. The early charters often contemplated the possibility of such a policy. It has always been recognized, notably by the Supreme Court, that a railroad is a public industry, and that it performs a function of the state. The question, therefore, is not one of fundamental theory but of practical expediency.

"The greater part of the railroad mileage of the world is publicly owned and operated. The American and the British railroads are the outstanding instances of private ownership and operation, but even this country owns and operates railroads in Alaska and the Isthmus of Panama, and one is operated in the Philippines by the territorial government.

"There is a great variety of opinions as to public ownership and operation. It has had its evils, but also its benefits. There is no prevailing tendency to abandon it, although there is a marked tendency to change the form. It is clear that other countries have adopted public ownership and operation, not as a matter of principle but for reasons of expediency. Often they have been forced into it because private enterprise would not build, or could no longer carry on. Sometimes military considerations have been paramount, or an unwillingness to rely on foreign capital, or a desire to use the railroads for the general business and industry of the country in its competition with other countries.

Earnings No Test.

"Because of this variety of underlying motives, it is idle to measure the results by the test of earnings. Nor is a demonstration of various evil results convincing. It is easy to assemble a most impressive array of evils—financial, political and economic — from the history of our railroads. The immediate question, in connection with both public and private ownership and operation, is whether demonstrated evils can be corrected. The ultimate question is which system, when fully safeguarded, will produce the better results."

At this point he cites two instances which are often used as arguments against public ownership and operation—one the Federal control of our railroads during the war and the other the operation of the Canadian National system.

The theory that the results of our Federal wartime control offer a valid argument against public ownership is completely refuted, Eastman says, by the dispassionate "War History of American Railroads" written by the late Walker D. Hines, who, though himself a believer in private ownership and operation, wrote that the Government's temporary operation of the roads during the war "accomplished with credit the objects which made resort to it imperative."

An Opposition Report.

As for the Canadian National system, Eastman says it is conceded that the lines forming it have been operated more efficiently and have given better service since than before their acquisition by the public. A royal commission appointed by the Conservative government in 1931 to inquire into the workings of the system—an undertaking which had been administered by the opposition party—found that it was an "efficient transport system affording a service of high standard and with a loyal and enthusiastic staff of officers and employes."

The strictures of the commission were mainly against unwarranted expenditures on branch lines and hotels and on services duplicating those of the Canadian Pacific. But, as Eastman points out, similar reckless expenditures were made by the privately owned railroads of this country; for example, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati and Philadelphia passenger stations and in New York City, where there was "prodigal and wasteful construction of new hotels, partly by railroad capital." Both in Canada and the United States, these expenditures were characteristic of the times.

Eastman notes as a significant fact that the investigating commission did not recommend that the Canadian National system be returned to private ownership, but confined itself to proposing administrative changes to correct the evils found to exist.

"Public ownership and operation," Eastman continues, "would clearly go further than any other change to abate the railroad ills described above (in the first part of his report). Public credit would take the place of crippled private credit. Management and operation of the industry would be wholly united. Public regulation would largely merge with management and operation. Financial domination would cease. The important questions are whether other ills would take the place of those abated, and how serious they would be; whether public opinion is ready for so radical a change; and how difficult and perilous the taking over of the properties would now be."

The danger most emphasized, he says, is that of political interference. This might

The Question of Profits

MR. EASTMAN does not go into the question of the profits that might be expected under Government operation. This is a matter, obviously, about which no prophecy can be made, for the earnings from year to year would depend not only on general business conditions, and other factors, but they would depend to a large extent, on the broad governmental policy that might be adopted. That is to say, the roads might be operated primarily for profit to the Government, or they might be operated more as a social service undertaking.

What the railroads were able to do under private ownership, prior to the depression, is suggestive of the profit-making possibilities under Eastman's plan. In 1925, the net railway operating income of the Class 1 roads, which operate about 92 per cent of the total railway mileage of the country and earn about 97 per cent of the total revenue, was $1,121,076,341. The net railway operating income is the income from actual operation, excluding income from investments, and it is the figure which most accurately reflects the earning capacity of the roads from year to year. Dividend payments are not always an accurate guide, since they may be paid, as they were in 1930, 1931 and 1932, largely out of surplus.

It must be borne in mind (as Eastman points out in his report) that a huge proportion of the earnings of the railroads today go to meet fixed charges, made up principally of the interest on their funded debt. For 1932, the total income of the Class 1 roads, including net operating income and other income, was $550,845,690; against this, there were fixed charges, for interest, rent and other purposes, amounting to $690,049,511, or $139,203,821 more than the income from all sources.

League Reform Idea of Italy Is World Fascism

Herriot Says Germany Also Shares View of Mussolini for Substitute for Geneva Pact.

By EDOUARD HERRIOT,
Former Premier of France.

PARIS, Jan. 27.

THE Fascist Grand Council, presided over by Premier Mussolini, issued a statement the fifth of December demanding radical reform of the League of Nations, its constitutional functioning, and objectives, if Italy was to continue.

There is nothing illegitimate in this. Reform of the League of Nations is provided for by Article 26 of the Covenant, but reform on this occasion has certain difficulties.

Indeed, this new offensive was definitely directed against Great Britain and France, against their liberal ideas. One cannot accuse Mussolini of lacking singleness of purpose. He attacks democracy wherever he finds it.

However, for several days international opinion misunderstood the Italian attack, comprehending vaguely that its object was revision of the treaties and observing German enthusiasm for the Roman decision.

Clear to French.

Slowly the situation cleared up. For us democratic French it is entirely clear and we are resolutely and completely opposed to the Italian initiative and consider it is only right to say so frankly.

But, before defining our conclusions, it is necessary to examine progress in this matter since Dec. 5.

At their recent meeting, Titulescu and Benes declared themselves "For the absolute inviolability of the pact of the League of Nations in its present form and intangibility that must be defended, both against any eventual change and against all efforts to substitute other methods."

Poland also seems opposed to the doctrine tending to line up small nations against the great. Judging by the newspaper, Social Demokraten, the Swedish democracy has also risen with force against the Mussolini project. They do not want certain peoples to confide their interests to an international Fascist directory.

But it is Benes, for Czecho-Slovakia, who has stated most categorically the viewpoint of the small Powers. Speaking of Kosice, he said:

"We will not stand for reform tending to destroy directly or indirectly the principles of democracy on which the League of Nations is founded because we consider the League the most precious possession won from the war, not only for the small states but for Europe as a whole."

Fascism and Democracy.

Due to his keen political sense, Benes has proved the ablest critic of the Italian plan. So speaking, we have in mind the remarkable interview he gave the newspaper, Slovensky Denik, in which he said:

"The pact of the League of Nations is the most perfect expression of modern political science."

What really are opposed are Italian ideas and the idealism on which the League is founded. At the bottom, this is a fight between Fascism and Hitlerism, on the one hand, and, on the other, the attempt to establish an international democracy. After all, this attempt has been largely productive of results already and so many judicial decisions and contracts are tied up in the League that, in breaking them, we would plunge the world into chaos and very quickly into war.

Do you want an example? Austria provides one. The Austrians themselves admit how much their country owes to the League. Twice it has been saved by the League and saved without damage to her political prestige. So it is clear why Austria will soon join the others in the attempt to save this great international forum.

An English View.

Some of the Italian newspapers accuse Titulescu and Benes of attempting to interrupt the course of history as Joshua attempted to halt the sun. But the Manchester Guardian shows forcibly that the changes proposed in the statutes of the Geneva institution are intended by the countries demanding them as an indirect method of arriving at their ends, to limit the right of small Powers and reduce to nothing the League of Nations. The Guardian says:

"No reform should be tolerated that does not reinforce the Geneva organism. Enfeebling of this organism will surely lead to war."

This is the exact truth. Subordinating the

I know that my retirement will make no difference in its cardinal principles; that it will always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare; never be satisfied with merely printing news; always be drastically independent; never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutocracy or predatory poverty.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Reform in City Administration.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

IT IS indeed gratifying to those who still hold the belief that honesty should prevail in municipal governments to witness the starting of a reform movement in Kansas City.

Fired by the success which the foes of Tammany had in New York City, a group has banded together to bring about the same results in the western metropolis of this State, namely, the elimination from public life of the old, outworn, political middleman or boss of city politics in America. The movement is only in keeping with the times. A so-called Brain Trust guides the affairs of Cincinnati; Detroit has the youngest Mayor in its history; Pittsburgh has dismissed the henchmen of the Mellon machine, and staid Boston has inducted into office as its Mayor an independent Democrat.

There is no reason why the two largest cities of Missouri should be aloof from the trend. The Legislature has at last closed its ridiculous session, and the principal actors at Jefferson City were tried and true agents of the big city machines. With the fall elections in the offing, the reform movement has made a timely beginning. While it attempts to place men of progressive views in charge of municipal affairs, it would be well to drive from State legislative halls these tools of pudgy bosses.

The old-time politician is fast disappearing from Washington, and the handwriting is on the wall for him in local politics throughout the land. If the youth of the cities would organize behind men of established integrity, it would not be long before these municipal parasites would be cast into political oblivion.

Away with them. Few would miss their departure. LAURENCE V. DONOVAN.

In Behalf of the School Tax.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I WANT to thank you for the editorial on the necessity of maintaining the 85-cent school tax. The public schools are doing wonderful work.

In my neighborhood, the Gardenville School offers the only real playground to children. It offers them recreation and keeps children off the streets. It would be unthinkable to have this benefit to youth cut off by a failure to vote "Yes" for the school tax.

MRS. OTTO H. HEMPELMANN,
President, Gardenville Playground Mothers' Circle.

For a One-Chamber Legislature.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

ONE cannot help agreeing with your correspondents of the past few days who say that a citizenship awakened to its own best interests is our only hope of good government in the future. In Missouri, at the present time, we need such an awakening and such a citizenry, to give us at once a unicameral system of government at Jefferson City.

If Vermont survived 59 years without two houses in its Legislature and the National Municipal League's model state charter describes a one-chamber Legislature as the best, as shown by its researches, and as our bicameral system in Missouri has shown itself as the worst, both in expense to the taxpayer and as to results achieved, then it is time we change and give the other system a chance, both for the saving of taxpayers' money involved and the need we have of some legislators who consider the greatest good to the majority of our people who elected them.

In a bicameral system, one cannot very well point out just who is to blame in the matter. If the people did know, our recall machinery could not be brought into operation to recall all the Representatives or Senators guilty in time to remedy matters. Take the case of the old-age pension bill. The bill was approved, but no money included to put it in effect, requiring that the people spend more money on the initiative and referendum and a special election if they want to force the present legislative bodies of our State to pass legislation already overwhelmingly approved by our people at the polls. This was a flagrant outrage.

Therefore, citizens of Missouri and especially taxpayers, get together and by means of the initiative and referendum, change our State Constitution so that from now on a single-chamber Legislature can be elected by the Hare system of proportional representation to give all minorities a "say" in Missouri, and relieve our people once and for all time of a system which permits two houses to jockey with each other for months.

WILLIAM HENRY GRUEN.

Dr. Laidler's Address.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

THAD SNOW of Charleston, Mo., directs attention to the League for Industrial Democracy "Economics of the New Deal" broadcasts over the NBC (KWK in St. Louis) at 7 o'clock every Saturday evening. As Mr. Snow says, they are indeed well worth hearing, and the league is to be congratulated on having an able director, Dr. Harry W. Laidler of New York, who arranges to have on this program members of the Brain Trust and other nationally known economists, and participates himself.

St. Louisans who have been enjoying the broadcasts will welcome an opportunity to hear Dr. Laidler speak in person on "The New Deal" at Soldan High School Auditorium at 8 o'clock Monday evening, Jan. 29.

GUSTAVE LIPPMANN.

The New Freedom of American Industry

Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, discusses "Industry and the Recovery Act" in the February Scribner's.

Naturally his interest centers in steel, and that industry's experience under the code is the subject of his article. But viewing the situation as a whole, he is persuaded that the National Industrial Recovery Act is potentially a charter of liberty, a new freedom for industry, so to speak, and as the air clears and confusion is dispersed, we shall all be able to see that "our business structure is being put upon a firmer basis, which will be helpful to our national economy."

The matter of fair competition, for instance. Does this mean the death of competition, as some fear, and an industrial evolution that will inevitably end in monopoly?

He does not think so. On the contrary, he believes that, in the steel industry, it will stimulate enterprise, promote efficiency and rewrite the law of the survival of the fittest in a new, wholesome script.

In arguing this point, he chooses a rather convincing illustration—that of the one-price policy of the retail business. On no other policy, he says, could the modern department store be operated. If every purchase were a price-duel between the salesman and the purchaser, retail business in its present volume and manner of functioning would be impossible. There will be no dissent from that.

So with steel. There is a wide variety of steel products. Under the code, each company files its prices on these various items with the American Iron and Steel Institute. No change in price can be made except by filing new prices. Any company that sells below its published price is subject to penalty.

Does such uniformity stifle initiative and economies? Far from it. Some company, says Mr. Grace, develops a new, economical process, say for making alloy steel bars. It reduces the price. Naturally, it will get the business. The competitive advantage will have been fairly earned and openly enjoyed. Other companies must either develop as good a process or discontinue production of that particular material.

Competitive genius, we are assured, will have scope to display itself even within the identical price range. The factors of quality, service, reliability will never lose their magic.

Mr. Grace takes up the disproportionate cost of distribution which, in his opinion, is chargeable, in part, to the energy expended in the everlasting battle of prices under the old order and the unfair practices inseparable from it. He looks for a better relationship among producer, distributer and customer and the passing of costly customs.

So much for operative and merchandising details.

What about labor? "Industry has every reason," says Mr. Grace, "to be well pleased at the better deal for labor which has come about in the past few months under the Recovery Act. This satisfaction is real, not simulated. Business depending on volume sales knows better than any theorist that widespread purchasing power is the heart of trade. The higher wage scales were put into effect by many industries weeks before Washington signed their codes.

"Industry knows that it is an enlightened and intelligent policy to pay the maximum wage rates which the profits of a business will bear."

But wages can come only from profits. On this point, Mr. Grace says:

> The prosperity of industry depends on the high purchasing power of the individual. The relationship is also reciprocal. If purchasing power is to be maintained, the respective industries must prosper in order to continue to pay high wages. High wages must be maintained, yet high wages cannot last for long if they are obtained by dipping into surplus.

Does the recovery program point to the ultimate socialization of industry? Not as Mr. Grace sees it. He does not "confuse a reasonable policing of industry by the Government with any attempt toward seizure of power." Moreover, the administration has disavowed any such intention. But "in permitting industry to co-operate, in freeing it from the bondage of outmoded laws adopted for public protection when conditions were vastly different from those of today, and in permitting new freedom for new conditions, the Government does have an obligation to see that the new privileges of industry are used constructively."

Concerning the "bondage of outmoded laws," Mr. Grace elsewhere in his article says that "one of its (the Recovery Act's) chief benefits has been to relieve industry from the shackles of the anti-trust laws."

This dispensation to industry has occasioned a considerable misgiving and in some instances—Senators Borah and Nye, for example—a good deal of alarm. The general impression has been that the anti-trust laws have been suspended. Donald Richberg, general counsel for the National Recovery Administration, declares that is a mistaken impression. "The anti-trust laws of the United States," he insists, "are still in force and effect, and monopolistic practices are not permitted even under the provisions of the codes." Exemption from the provisions of the anti-trust laws, he explains, does not mean that a code can be written to authorize monopolistic practices, or "that under a code, industries can organize and proceed to fix prices, or to carry out other operations in restraint of trade, free from the penalties of the anti-trust laws."

The codes permit co-operation heretofore proscribed by law, but they do not permit conspiracy against the public welfare. The business behavior they approve of is that of fair dealing. Any industry that disregards the restrictions imposed by NRA to protect the public interest is, in Mr. Richberg's words, "laying itself open to prosecution under the anti-trust laws. . . . "

In an experiment of such reach and daring as the recovery program, misunderstanding was, of course, unavoidable. The chiseler, too, is always present to take advantage of any situation. Such experiences are items in every bill of progress. They are obstructive and exasperating, but their day is brief where the will of Government is resolute and motivated by high purpose, as the present administration indubitably is. They are a negligible minority. Industry for the most part has responded finely and is co-operating earnestly with the Government's efforts to work out industry's salvation.

Industrial leaders as a whole, we believe, indorse Mr. Grace's interpretation of the Recovery Act and share his belief that, out of the economic crisis and the measures for recovery, "certain permanent values are going to result . . . whether or not any particular legislative act is permanent."

A Disciple of Pooh-Bah

Gilbert and Sullivan, in their operas, were fond of recording the difficulties of characters who found themselves burdened with multiple roles in public and private life. In "The Mikado," for instance, there was Pooh-Bah. As Private Secretary, he favored an elaborate wedding; as Chancellor of the Exchequer, urged due economy; as Solicitor, advised taking a chance; as Lord Chief Justice, pledged law enforcement, and finally offered, as Paymaster-General, to juggle the accounts so that, as Lord High Auditor, he could never discover the fraud. In "Iolanthe," the Lord Chancellor faced a dilemma when he fell in love with a ward of his court. Could he give his own consent to his own marriage with his own ward, he wondered; or, if he married her without such consent, would he be in contempt of his own court, and have to plead before himself for mercy?

These ludicrous situations were based, of course, on the red tape of British officialdom. Lest they be considered more than slightly overdrawn, let us consider the anecdote recently related by Viscount Sankey of what happened when he was promoted from Judge of the King's Bench to be Lord High Chancellor. Arriving at his new office, he found a letter directing him to send a letter of resignation, as Judge, to the Lord Chancellor. So, in his own words, "I wrote letters to myself, resigning and thanking myself for the services I had rendered the state as a Judge, and wishing myself many happy years as Lord Chancellor."

We need have no fears for Britain while the dry humor of the Gilbert and Sullivan tradition prevails.

Congress and the Income Tax Law

Congress will plug the holes in the income tax law, increase Federal revenues and more equitably distribute the burden of taxation, if it enacts the recommendations made to it by the House Committee on Ways and Means.

The phenomenal decline in income tax revenues from $1,096,000,000 in 1929 to $352,000,000 in 1933 is attributable only in part to the shrinkage in individual incomes caused by the depression. Much of it has resulted from the methods of avoidance of which large taxpayers have been able to avail themselves under the law.

By incorporating themselves, persons of large means have brought their taxes down from the combined rate of 63 per cent which now obtains in the top bracket to the 13¾ per cent rate which is imposed on the incomes of corporations. Mr. Wiggin, we have learned, maintained six such corporations. The committee proposes to check this practice by levying an additional tax of 35 per cent on the undistributed income of personal holding companies. This tax will be levied irrespective of whether the holding corporation has been organized as a device for avoiding the payment of income surtaxes. It is estimated that it will yield the Government $25,000,000 a year.

By splitting the income of a family into separate portions for husband and wife, it has been possible to bring it down from the high-rate brackets into the brackets where lower rates apply. The committee recommends that husbands and wives be compelled to file joint returns, a reform which will add some $40,000,000 to Federal revenues, at the present level of rates. Enactment of this proposal will put an end to deals of the sort by which Charles E. Mitchell was recently enabled to avoid payment of a tax which totaled more than $1,000,000.

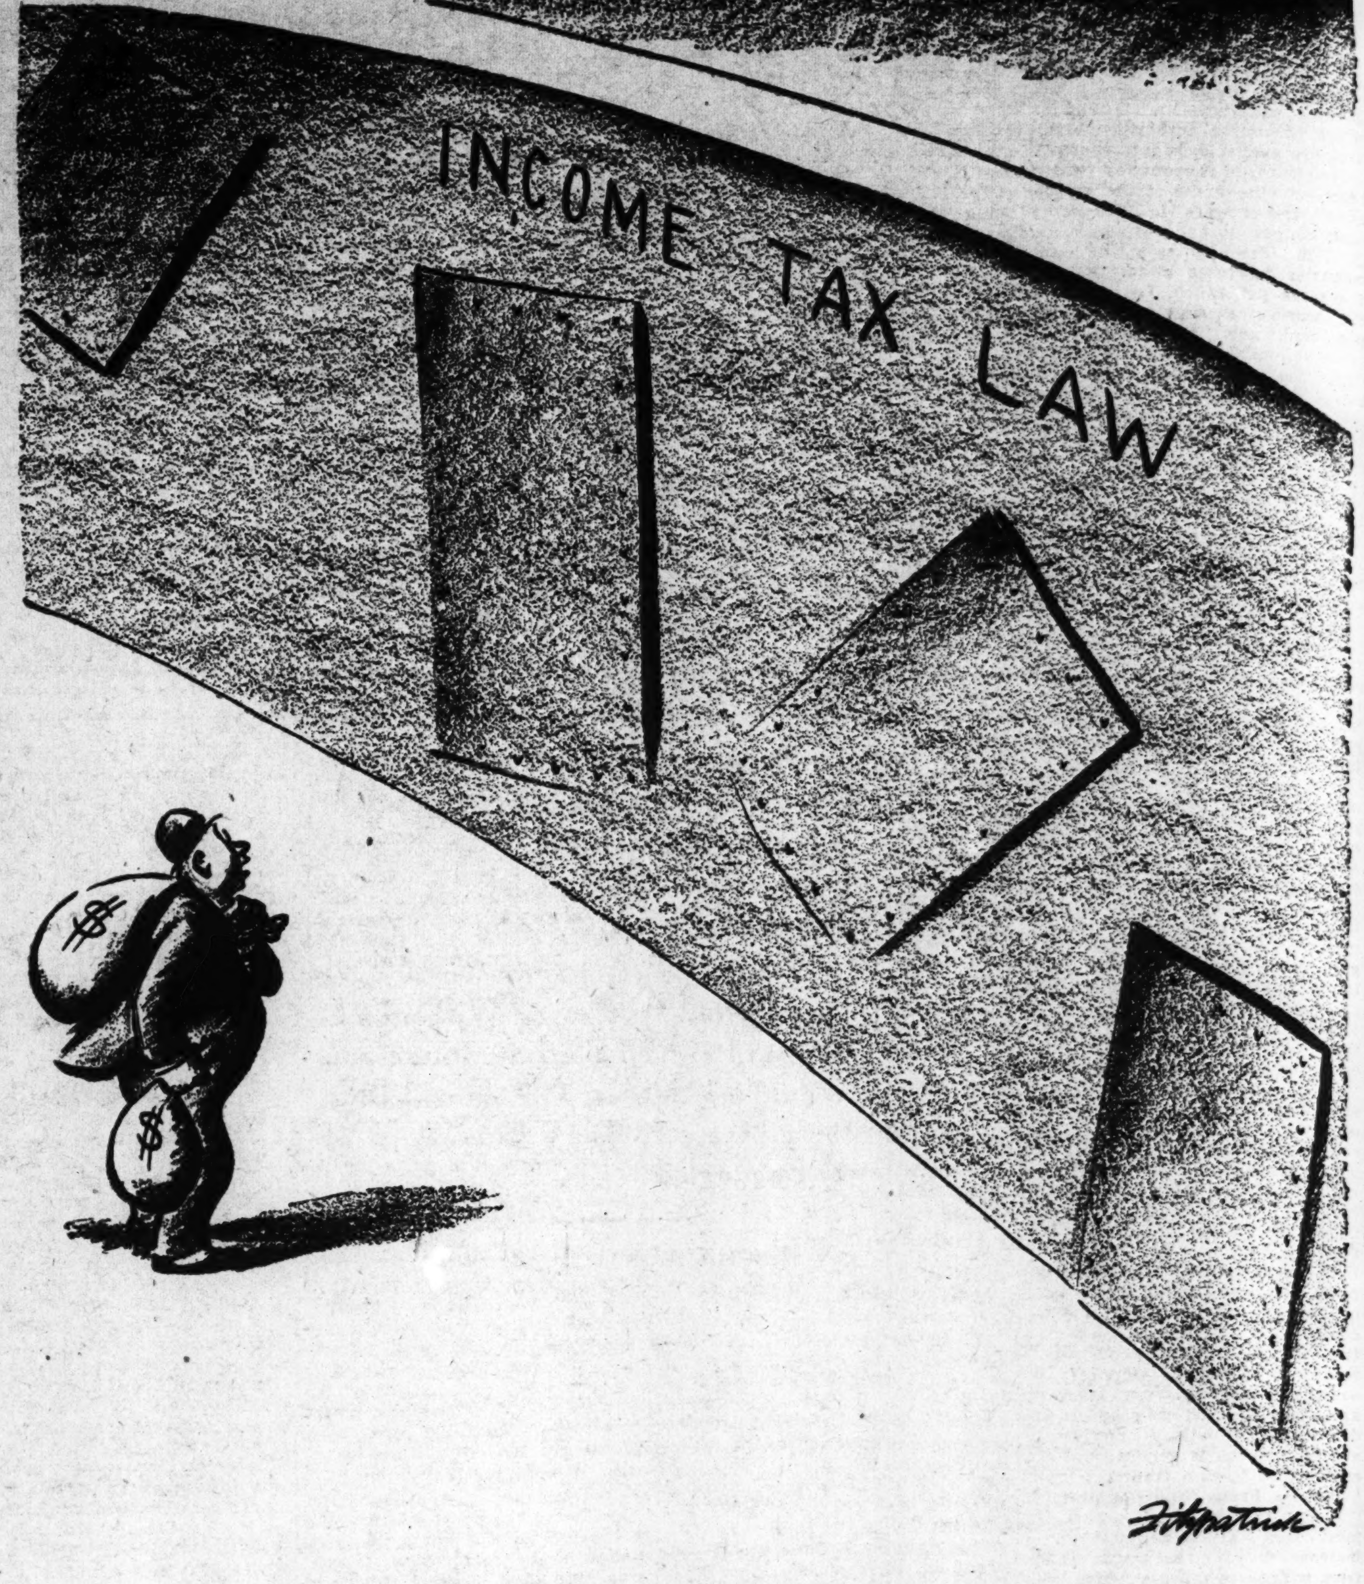
Most important among the means of tax avoidance has been the deduction from income of losses in capital values. By making security sales to register capital losses, it has been possible for persons of substantial means completely to escape the necessity of making tax payments. Almost without exception, the witnesses who have appeared during the Senate banking inquiry have testified to the employment of this method of avoidance.

The committee proposes that such changes in capital value, whether increments or decrements, be segregated from other types of income for tax purposes. When this provision becomes law, it will no longer be possible to deduct capital losses from ordinary income. They are to be subtracted only from capital gains. Such gains are to be taxed at the usual rates of normal and surtax, but on a sliding scale, ranging from 100 per cent to 40 per cent of their value, depending upon whether the property in question had been held one year or as much as five years before the gain was realized. The proposal has the merit of ending loss deduction as a means of tax avoidance without at the same time sacrificing the revenue which the Government can and should collect from the recipients of capital gains.

As important as the prevention of avoidance is the influence of the committee's proposals on the distribution of the tax burden. The top bracket remains at $1,000,000. The combined rate in this bracket remains at 63 per cent. The tax here is still lower than it was during the war; lower than that which is now collected in Great Britain. Recipients of large incomes will, none the less, be taxed more heavily than at present. By reducing the number of brackets, the higher rates are made to reach further down and the total tax is thereby increased. Prevention of avoidance, too, will bring higher collections from the larger incomes.

The taxpayer at the bottom of the scale will receive no reduction in rates; but he will enjoy an earned income allowance of 10 per cent on all his income up to $3000; on the earned portion of his income up to $8000. This is less than the 25 per cent allowance which was made from 1924 to 1932. It is less than the 25 per cent allowance which was recommended to the committee by the Treasury. But it is an improvement on the present law, which makes no distinction between incomes derived from personal labor and those derived from investment. The restoration of the earned income allowance which the committee proposes will afford the man of small means some measure of tax relief.

If the Congress writes the sort of tax bill which the Committee on Ways and Means is inviting it to write, it will once more compel the income tax to perform its proper function in the American revenue system.



NOT GOING TO BE SO EASY NOW.

Sinclair Lewis' Latest

WORK OF ART. By Sinclair Lewis. (Doubleday Doran & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

SINCLAIR LEWIS, easily the most effective critic of American life in the realm of contemporary fiction, is at his best when developing a character highly specialized for the hyperbolic representation of some typical mood or trend or state of affairs that he views with ironical amusement. Someone has remarked that he can write only when he hates something; but, although he does seem curiously lacking in the power to love anything, "scorns" might be the more nearly accurate word.

At any rate, when some form of asininity is his target, he regularly shoots a "possible," as the marksmen say. Were he a lawyer, he would be far more successful in prosecution than in defense. When, in the case of Ann Vickers, he relinquished for the moment his well-known formula and developed a character whom he manifestly favored, there was a noticeable slipping of cogs in the logical mechanism of his procedure, a curious wrong-headedness in the implied argument of his story.

Were he a man ungifted, he would probably be a village "crab," in the colloquial sense. As it is, he is a world crab, a very superior crab, and so most certain of his goal when proceeding backward.

In "Work of Art", he is again at his devastating best, apparently for the reason above suggested. His theme is Success (as it "succeeds" in our day), and the same might well have been the title also. The theme is worked out in the contrasting lives of two brothers, Ora and Myron Weagle, sons of a "hick town" hotel keeper. The hick town is Gopher Prairie, as Gopher Prairie was Sauk Center; but its latest name is Black Thread Center, Conn. Really, the name should be "Black Threat," we learn; but what can you expect of "hicks"? (Golly! how Sinclair Lewis must hate the memories of his boyhood!)

Myron, the elder son, is an honest, industrious fellow, uncompromisingly faithful to all the little daily duties of a hick town hotel drudge. Ora, on the contrary, conceives himself as being somewhat in the nature of a bird of paradise, miraculously born in a henyard and unalterably opposed to the preposterous idea that he should be expected to do any serious scratching for himself. He is going to be a great poet, appropriately at ease in a circumambient atmosphere of luxury and universal adulation. (He would not then be Ora Weagle—what a name, indeed! He would be "Marcel Lenoir.")

Ora's "genius" is in fact a combination of abnormal vanity and laziness, operating through a woozily inaccurate mentality. Congenitally a rotter, a shirker, a moocher, and therefore inevitably a petty liar, he dodges the reality of his condition by jeering at his allegedly doltish brother. It is clear to Ora that Myron has "no imagination, no passion, no ambition, no consciousness of beauty," etc. In short, he isn't at all "spiritual" like Ora. Lucky for Myron, in a way; for Ora has heard that great poets, being sensitive souls, suffer a lot. "I bet I'll suffer like all get out!" he says to himself.

But Ora has Myron all wrong; for Myron has conceived a great dream—nothing less than some day to build and run a perfect hotel; and toward the realization of this dream he turns all the energy that is in him. Managing to escape from the dingy old American House in Black Thread Center, he knocks about in the hotel world, patiently swatting at any menial duty, to the end that he may learn all about the business he is grimly determined to master. After much hard work and many discouragements, he begins to climb, and becomes prosperous.

At this point, the tale looks almost like something out of Horatio Alger or maybe Samuel Smiles or the late Orison Swett Marden, but for the known fact that Sinclair Lewis habitually writes with his tongue in his cheek.

All the while Myron is climbing, Ora is kidding himself along as usual, dodging his difficulties by mooching regularly from his despised, because vulgarly successful, brother—that greedy materialist! Occasionally he gets a "Western" into one of the pulp magazines, and gradually he works into the "ghost-writing" game. The trials of unappreciated genius!

At length, well on into middle age, Myron reaches the top in his profession as hotel manager, and is ready at last to build his perfect hotel. Ora, although by now the author of various more or less nasty novels, is still dwelling precariously, save when he "touches" Myron for another "loan," in the arty world of neglected greatness.

If the story ended here, it would indeed be in substance an Alger masterpiece. But Sinclair Lewis is only now approaching his point. While Myron is climbing and Ora is mooching, the world is changing rapidly. We are no longer living in the allegedly ludicrous '90s. We are modern and sophisticated. Briefly, the world is catching up with Ora, as will be seen.

Myron, "successful" by virtue of sterling qualities, builds his perfect hotel. On the opening night, there are a suicide and a murder in the house, the principals being people of prominence. Myron's luck changes. The perfect hotel fails, and Myron, having lost heavily, drifts from job to job, always a little lower with every change, until he disappears.

But at long last, the world has caught up with Ora. "In 1930, 1931 and 1932, he had two plays on Broadway and a half a dozen scenarios in Hollywood, to which he generously lent half his time. He made $25,000 a year, and as he did not spend more than $27,000, he was financially comfortable." Also, "splendidly virile, he gave regularly to several million fond radio listeners" wise and witty messages regarding the depression. "He received a thousand fawning letters a day, and 10 stenographers were kept busy answering them."

Clearly, Ora is overwhelmingly successful! But what of Myron and his sterling qualities? Here comes the masterly Lewisian twist. Ora, with his latest blonde, "a spiritual and entertaining actress," is driving out to Hollywood in his new Twelve. (It will be a Sixteen next year.) Benighted on the plains of Western Kansas, he decides he will have to stop at an impossible hick town hotel. He enters to register, stares a moment in consternation, and flees.

The man behind the desk is Myron!

And so, with manifest asininity for a target, the keenest social marksmen of them all has scored another "possible"; and indubitably that final shot of his achieves dead center.

THE STORY OF MY DEATH. By Lauro de Bosis. (Oxford University Press, New York City.)

LAURO DE BOSIS was the young Italian whose "Icaro," a lyrical drama in the classical Greek manner, appeared in an English translation last November. It was noted in this column. "Icaro," which received the Olympic prize for poetry at Amsterdam in 1928, is hardly to be regarded as having any considerable intrinsic value as a literary creation. Nevertheless, it has great human value, since it serves as a symbolic reminder of the young author's lofty heroism, and especially so in that it now seems to have been prophetic of his triumphant death.

"At the beginning of the Fascist movement," we are told, "Lauro de Bosis, like most of the young men of the time, was enthusiastic about the reforms which it promised; but he soon recognized the dangerous elements in the system and its betrayal of the liberal traditions in Italy. His conviction grew that protest should be made from within the country, and in 1930 he organized the Alleanza Nazionale."

It was in pursuance of his duty as a leader of this alliance that he met his death. On the afternoon of Oct. 3, 1931, he took off alone in an airplane from Marseilles with 400,000 leaflets addressed to the King and to the people of Italy, denouncing the tyranny of Mussolini. Reaching the capital five hours later, he astonished the Romans by flying close down over the principal streets and squares, showering his leaflets like a snow. His task completed, he rose steeply into the sky and disappeared forever. If he was shot down over the sea by Balbo's swarm of faster planes, the Government has not informed the public.

The precious little book here noted contains a letter written to the world at large during the night before the flight to Rome, and mailed to a journalist friend with the request that it be given to the press if, as he believed, death should crown the adventure. The message duly appeared, with some omissions. Here it is presented in full.

There are no heroics in the letter. It is the simple statement of a spirit truly noble; and it is hard to see how anyone can read it without a glow of pride in human nature at its best. There are values greater than any man's life, and this young poet knew it. So much to win, and only life to lose!

"My death," he wrote, "however undesired by me personally, who have so many things to achieve—could not but add to the success of my fight. . . . After all, it is the question of giving a small example of civic spirit and to draw the attention of my fellow citizens to their real situation."

It would, of course, be no great task to cheapen speciously the whole affair by indulging in a bit of facile Freudianizing. One might, for instance, conjure meanly with "the martyr complex" and here and there win credit for the shrewdness of the disillusioned. But there are depths in men no scientific plummet ever sounded; and from those depths this young man spoke.

which official or authoritative figures are available, is interesting.

The exports of 49 countries (which represent nine-tenths of the world's export trade) were, in 1932, more than 60 per cent below the total for 1929. The imports of the same countries decreased almost exactly the same per cent. To be exact, the world's exports declined 61.8 per cent and its imports 60.8 per cent between 1929 and 1932. The first three months of 1932 recorded new low marks, the world depression being greatest last March. Then came the break—in March and April.

Extent of Trade Advance.

Various yardsticks have been used by international authorities to measure the extent of the economic depression and the improvement which is under way. From reports covering a period of five months (the latest for which official statistics are available) a composite trade chart of 49 countries shows an increase of imports amounting to 3.2 per cent and exports amounting to nearly 10 per cent—an average gain of around 6 per cent in world trade.

Steel and iron production is another accurate prosperity gauge, since it reflects the condition of many and diversified industries. After a drop in world production of 58.2 per cent between 1929 and 1932, and a still further decline in March, 1933, the production of steel mounted between April and August, 1933, by 42.8 per cent. Over the same period—1929 to 1932—the production of cast iron decreased 60 per cent. The monthly production in August, 1933, was 43.7 per cent greater than it was in April.

Since foreign trade (imports and exports) of nations represents but a fraction of their industrial and commercial activity, it is interesting to glance over domestic commerce reports of a few of the leading countries in Europe. Latest figures with which exact comparisons can be made deal with the third quarter of 1933. Unofficial reports being received by the League of Nations for the final quarter confirm rather than change deductions that the upward trend is permanent rather than temporary or seasonal. Railway car loadings and goods handled in seaports indicate that growth in production and distribution is general and not confined to foreign trade.

Reports From Nine Countries.

During the six-month period (in most cases, April to September) the increase in nine European countries, which are representative, was as follows: Hungary 25.2, Czecho-Slovakia 15.3, Poland 16.7, Italy 3.2, Holland 21.9, France 8.9, Belgium 27.1, Germany 20. Loadings at German ports increased 20 per cent between April and August, and those of the chief British seaports by 21.7 over the same period.

While the world's economic and industrial situation is, as a whole, more optimistic than it has been for four years, there are still dark clouds on the horizon. The European political situation is muddled. Disarmament, whereby it was hoped materially to lessen the five billion dollar annual burden borne by the taxpayers, has proved abortive. International exchange stability of some sort is yet to be obtained and trade restrictions and tariff barriers still hinder international trade. Upon the ability of statesmen and governments to solve these problems depends to a great extent the speed with which prosperity will return.

missions. Here it is presented in full.

There are no heroics in the letter. It is e simple statement of a spirit truly noble; nd it is hard to see how anyone can read it ithout a glow of pride in human nature at s best. There are values greater than any an's life, and this young poet knew it. So uch to win, and only life to lose!

"My death," he wrote, "however undesired achieve—could not but add to the success f my fight. . . . After all, it is the uestion of giving a small example of civic pirit and to draw the attention of my fel-

w citizens to their real situation."

It would, of course, be no great task to heapen speciously the whole affair by indulging in a bit of facile Freudianizing. One might, for instance, conjure meanly with
"the martyr complex" and here and there win credit for the shrewdness of the disil-usioned. But there are depths in men no scientific plummet ever sounded; and from those depths this young man spoke.

which official or authoritative figures are available, is interesting.

The exports of 49 countries (which represent nine-tenths of the world's export trade) were, in 1932, more than 60 per cent below the total for 1929. The imports of the same countries decreased almost exactly the same per cent. To be exact, the world's exports declined 61.8 per cent and its imports 60.8 per cent between 1929 and 1932. The first three months of 1932 recorded new low marks, the world depression being greatest last March. Then came the break—in March and April.

Extent of Trade Advance.

Various yardsticks have been used by international authorities to measure the extent of the economic depression and the improvement which is under way. From reports covering a period of five months (the latest for which official statistics are available) a composite trade chart of 49 countries shows an increase of imports amounting to 3.2 per cent and exports amounting to nearly 10 per cent—an average gain of around 6 per cent in world trade.

Steel and iron production is another accurate prosperity gauge, since it reflects the condition of many and diversified industries. After a drop in world production of 58.2 per cent between 1929 and 1932, and a still further decline in March, 1933, the production of steel mounted between April and August, 1933, by 42.8 per cent. Over the same period—1929 to 1932—the production of cast iron decreased 60 per cent. The monthly production in August, 1933, was 43.7 per cent greater than it was in April.

Since foreign trade (imports and exports) of nations represents but a fraction of their industrial and commercial activity, it is interesting to glance over domestic commerce reports of a few of the leading countries in Europe. Latest figures with which exact comparisons can be made deal with the third quarter of 1933. Unofficial reports being received by the League of Nations for the final quarter confirm rather than change deductions that the upward trend is permanent rather than temporary or seasonal. Railway car loadings and goods handled in seaports indicate that growth in production and distribution is general and not confined to foreign trade.

Reports From Nine Countries.

During the six-month period (in most cases, April to September) the increase in nine European countries, which are representative, was as follows: Hungary 25.2, Czecho-Slovakia 15.3, Poland 16.7, Italy 3.2, Holland 21.9, France 8.9, Belgium 27.1, Germany 20. Loadings at German ports increased 20 per cent between April and August, and those of the chief British seaports by 21.7 over the same period.

While the world's economic and industrial situation is, as a whole, more optimistic than it has been for four years, there are still dark clouds on the horizon. The European political situation is muddled. Disarmament, whereby it was hoped materially to lessen the five billion dollar annual burden borne by the taxpayers, has proved abortive. International exchange stability of some sort is yet to be obtained and trade restrictions and tariff barriers still hinder international trade. Upon the ability of statesmen and governments to solve these problems depends to a great extent the speed with which prosperity will return.

take several forms: (1) The extension of the spoils system into the service; (2) interference with rate adjustments to help certain groups or localities; (3) interference with construction programs for the benefit of certain localities or as a means of social relief; (4) interference with labor relations.

There must be safeguards against these dangers, he says, for it is clear that the railroads cannot be efficiently operated if they are allowed to become the tools of political parties.

"If the issue is made clear," he writes, "the country will register that opinion emphatically. The workers themselves can be a most important and effective safeguard, if they are allowed to organize freely, for it is far from their wish to be in jeopardy from political changes in government.

"Other effective safeguards are practicable. The tendency in countries which have public ownership and operation is now definitely to separate the railroads from ordinary governmental activities and make them autonomous, non-political enterprises. The best way of doing this is to vest their ownership in a corporation of which the Government is the stockholder, to be administered as an independent business enterprise.

"Control should be by a board of trustees with definite tenure of office and removable only for cause. The act creating the corporation should make it a positive duty of the trustees to operate the property on a self-sustaining basis so far as possible, and without regard to political considerations. It should be made a penal offense for the trustees, or any of their subordinates, to appoint, remove or retain officers or employes at the solicitation of any officer of the Government or political party organization, and for any such officer to solicit such action or interfere in any way with the disciplining of employes. In addition, there should be an Advisory Council."

Some Political Checks.

If further protection were desired, Eastman goes on, it would be possible to have the trustees appointed by a non-political committee, as is done in the case of the London Passenger Transportation Board, which on July 1 of last year took over all the passenger transportation services of London and its environs.

It is significant, he says, that the Canadian commission of 1931 made no finding that would indicate the extension of political patronage into the service, though apparently no special safeguard against this practice had been employed. He cites also a statement by Hines that the selection of personnel under Federal wartime control in this country was entirely free from political influences, direct or indirect.

As for the fourth of the listed dangers, namely that of interference with labor relations, Eastman says that public ownership would not materially change the present situation.

He considers that the dangers of major importance are the second and third—interference by Congressmen to obtain special favors for their districts. But he believes that effective safeguards can be set up. One of these, so far as new construction is concerned, would be to require a certificate of convenience and necessity from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Author Of the "Design"

Joseph B. Eastman was born in New York State in 1882 and was graduated from Amherst in 1904. His alma mater gave him the degree of LL. D. in 1926. From 1906 to 1913 he was secretary of the Public Franchise League of Boston, which, with Louis D. Brandeis, now a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, as its counsel, fought successfully to keep the control of the Boston transportation system in the hands of the public. After four years on the Massachusetts Public Service Commission—one of the most enlightened and effective of the State regulatory bodies—Eastman joined the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington in 1919, by appointment of President Wilson.

Eastman has never concealed his belief that public ownership is the ultimate solution of the railroad problem. At the same time, he has been so scrupulous in his interpretation of the law as he found it, and has become so expert in the highly technical work of the commission, that some of the leading railroad executives of the country were among those who urged his reappointment by President Hoover in 1929. His appointment by President Roosevelt last year to be Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation, the capacity in which he makes his report on the railroads, was generally applauded. He retains his membership on the I. C. C.

In June, 1931, Eastman wrote for the Post-Dispatch an article giving his views on Government ownership and the broad outlines of the tentative plan he is now proposing for Congress to study.

It could also be provided that if Congress should order new construction, against the advice of the commission, the yearly loss as estimated by the commission should be borne by the general funds of the Government. Also, the veto power of the President would be a check on unwarranted expenditures as the result of congressional action.

Character of Trustees.

As for rates, a safeguard could be provided by continuing the jurisdiction of the commission, at least over individual rates or groups of rates. As Eastman points out, Congress now has the power to legislate directly on rates, but is restrained by realization of the ultimate impracticability of such legislation "and the turmoil and confusion to which it would give rise." Here again, he adds, the veto power of the President is a safeguard.

"In the last analysis," he continues, "the greatest safeguard against political abuse would be the character of the original trustees. By strong resistance to such abuse and keeping employes, shippers and the general public fully informed in regard to their policies and the reasons for them, the trustees could go far to establish traditions which it would be difficult for weaker men to undermine, even if they later came into power. The force of such traditions in human affairs is very great. The Advisory Council, above suggested, could give effective support.

"Fortunately, in the inauguration of any new public undertaking men of strong character are likely to be the initial choice, for the selection of such men is necessary to satisfy public opinion. The greater danger comes later, in the filling of vacancies, when interest is not awakened or concentrated."

One of the difficult questions to be faced, Eastman candidly writes, is whether the railroads could be effectively administered as a single gigantic unit. He admits the seriousness of this question. Both the Pennsylvania and the Southern Pacific have administrative difficulties because of their size. The solution of the problem created by size will be found, he thinks, "in a staff and line form of organization, under which general policies and planning will be laid down by the staff, and the execution will be left to local officers with a large measure of autonomy and jurisdiction over comparatively small units or areas." But it is too much to say, he adds, that the answer to the problem has been found. If the railroads came into the possession of the Government overnight, there would probably be "a comparatively long period of trial and adjustment before the best form of organization could be devised and made effective."

Effect on Initiative.

He has no fear that the elimination of competition among railroads would stifle enterprise. Keen competition from other transportation agencies would still be a spur. Moreover, initiative could be stimulated by organizing the Government system so that comparisons could be made between the records of the different managers. Incentives could also be given through public recognition of accomplishment or merit.

"Compare the railroad industry with the telephone and the electric industries," he asks. "There has been much less competition in the latter, but will it be said that there has been less initiative and enterprise?"

On the subject of labor relations, he says that experience with the Government service in this country, leaving political patronage out of consideration, does not indicate that the Government would be unduly liberal as an employer of railroad labor. Wages paid by the Government have never gone to extremes, and in the matter of salaries it has been less generous than private employers.

Large labor-saving economies would be possible under Government operation, and some means of alleviating the hardships resulting from sudden displacements of labor would have to be found. But this would be true of any form of consolidation, public or private. Moreover, the problem caused by labor displacement is the continuing problem of all industry, and not of the railroads alone.

Where Opposition Lies.

Summing up public sentiment toward Government ownership of the railroads, Eastman finds that the financial world is less hostile than in the past, that the man in the street is indifferent, that labor is lukewarm, and that the greatest hostility is among railroad managements, supply houses and the larger shippers—groups that have always been among the chief beneficiaries of competition.

The strongest objection to public ownership is found, he says, in the present economic condition of the nation. In this connection he writes:

"What strain might be imposed upon national finances by acquisition of the railroad properties cannot be foreseen. It is probable that the acquisition could be made without the use of cash through an exchange of securities. It is also probable, however, that the securities given in exchange would have to be interest-bearing obligations, and the sum total of fixed charges might be increased by the exchange. Since there would be an actual or virtual Government guaranty, the holders of many railroad bonds would no doubt receive securities of equal or less face value bearing a lower interest rate. But it would also be necessary in many instances to give interest-bearing securities in some amount for outstanding stock.

"When governments acquire property, they normally pay more than it is worth, just as they normally sell for less. This has been the universal experience with railroads. The reasons are obvious. The sympathies of tribunals are with the individuals who are forced to part with their property. Doubts are resolved in their favor, and their lawyers are apt to be more aggressive than Government counsel.

"One can foresee what might happen under present conditions. It would at once be argued that present railroad earnings are not a fair test of inherent property values, on the theory that the depression is temporary and earnings will be much higher in the future.

"The possible effect of dollar depreciation would also enter in. It is likely that tribunals, including the courts, would give considerable weight to such arguments. But there is more than usual uncertainty as to the future, so that much greater weight might be given to this element than the facts would eventually justify."

The Logical Solution.

None of these present considerations alter his conclusion that Government ownership and operation is the logical solution of the railroad problem—a solution that ultimately will be accepted out of expediency, because of the inability of private enterprise and capital to carry on.

"Public regulation of a privately-owned and operated industry, reaching deeply into such matters as rates, service, capitalization, accounting, extensions and abandonments, mergers and consolidations, is a hybrid arrangement," he writes. "When an industry becomes so public in character that such intimate regulation of its affairs becomes necessary, in strict logic it would seem that it should cease to masquerade as a private industry and the Government should assume complete responsibility, financial and otherwise."

The Ills of the Roads.

What are the ills from which the railroads are suffering? A synopsis of Eastman's comprehensive diagnosis must suffice.

A more or less continual inflow of capital funds is essential to a healthy railroad system. As long as the roads are privately owned, this new capital must normally be obtained from private investors, for "the use of Government credit for privately owned industries can be justified only as a temporary expedient in an emergency." Private investors, however, have shied away from the railroads, so that the Government today, broadly speaking, is the only source of capital funds. The outlook for improved railroad credit is not promising.

Contrary to popular impression, the railroads at present are not in the aggregate much overcapitalized. The original cost of their property would not fall below $24,000,000,000. On Dec. 31, 1932, the total railroad capital outstanding was $23,573,556,588, made up of $10,226,070,233 in stock and $13,347,486,355 in funded debt.

There was much inflation in the original capitalization of many railroads, but this has since been offset, in the aggregate, by two main factors: (1) Much investment of earnings in carrier property by the more prosperous lines, and (2) the scaling down of original capitalizations through reorganization. An illustration of this scaling down is found in the case of the Chicago & Alton, whose over-capitalization was a "national scandal." Upon reorganization in 1931, its capitalization of $129,000,000 was reduced to $75,000,000, the stock of the old company being completely wiped out.

Earnings Very Low.

What concerns the investor is the fluctuating commercial value based on earning power—and railroad earnings have fallen very low. In 1932, the net railway operating income of the Class 1 roads was $326,000,000, in contrast with $601,000,000 in the depression year of 1921, and with $1,252,000,000 in 1929. In 1932 railroads operating nearly 74 per cent of the total Class 1 mileage failed by $250,000,000 to earn their fixed charges. The volume of freight and passenger business in 1932 was only about 50 per cent of that in 1926. At present 75 railroads are in receiverships or in the hands of the courts under the bankruptcy act, and except for loans from the R. F. C. many others would be in similar difficulties.

Differences in the individual credit situations of the railroads must be kept in mind; there is no such thing as "aggregate railroad credit." Many of the lines are overcapitalized; many are capitalized conservatively. But at present few railroads would be able to place a new security issue in the private market on a satisfactory basis.

It is important to note the amount and character of the funded debt, which aggregates 56 per cent of the outstanding capitalization. The public has a practical interest in this matter, since an unduly high ratio of debt to stock impairs the credit of the carrier and its ability to provide good service, or leads it to scrimp on maintenance in an effort to eke out earnings in times of depression. The great danger in a high percentage of funded debt is the inflexible burden of fixed charges which goes with it. Moreover, the fixed-charge situation of the railroads, what with their taxes, rentals, etc., is even worse than the 56 per cent ratio would indicate.

Old Bond Issues.

The character of this funded debt, Eastman points out, is much affected by the age of the industry. Numerous bond issues go back to the early days and carry first liens on roads which are now merely parts of larger systems. On top of these underlying issues has been built a structure of bond issues which may be secured by only second, third, fourth or even fifth liens.

In some cases the situation has been complicated by the issue of so-called income or adjustment bonds, the interest on which is not a fixed charge but is payable only when earned. Most of the strictly first liens are closed, so that the roads must now rely, in marketing new bonds, on so-called junior issues, with mortgage liens inferior to the liens of other issues outstanding. These junior issues, Eastman observes, will not, in most instances, be a good medium for the procurement of capital funds, even when better times return.

An investigation by one of his staff, Eastman says, revealed that large investors are beset with fears regarding railroad investments. Disillusionment has succeeded the confidence inspired by the provisions of the transportation act of 1920. Investors fear the competition of motor trucks and other transportation agencies, the probable abandonment of much railroad property, the effects of monetary inflation, the operation of the new Securities Act, the construction of the St. Lawrence Waterway, increase in taxation, regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission and a host of other things.

Whether or not these fears are justified, Eastman says, is beside the point; the point is that they prevail among the investing class and exert a serious influence. The depression has shown the dangers of a high percentage of funded debt in a way that has made a profound impression. The maturities faced by the railroads furnish added cause for alarm. For the next five years, funded-debt maturities in excess of $100,000, omitting debts to the RFC, total $1,533,700,751.

Another thing to be considered in connection with the financial plight of the railroads is the public drain on credit as the result of the great expenditures of the Federal Government. Attention is called to the increase in the public debt from $1,282,000,000 before we entered the war to a present total of nearly $24,000,000,000. To this drain on credit must be added the extensive borrowings of states, municipalities and other public bodies.

"The state of mind of many investors," writes Eastman, "rose to insane heights of confidence in the boom period, and it has now fallen to precipitous depths. With revival of business it is likely to rebound. The rise will be helped by the fact that the net earnings of the railroads will probably improve at a faster rate than the gross.

"The drastic economies in recent years have been accomplished to a considerable extent at the expense of maintenance, and what has been deferred in this respect must eventually be made good, but railroad managements have learned much through adversity and many of the economies will be permanent. Other improvements in railroad operation may be expected. The net earnings of 1929 could be regained, in all probability, with materially less gross than was enjoyed in that year.

"These facts tend toward optimism, but there is a hard road to travel before railroad credit will be established on a satisfactory basis."

"Viewed from the standpoint of average or aggregate railroad conditions, the future credit outlook seems most unpromising. The practical question relates to the credits of the individual railroad companies. Few of them meet the standards of private investment now, but some will measure up with improving business conditions. Many others will find it a very slow and difficult process to meet those standards, even if traffic conditions greatly improve; and consideration of average conditions suggests that the number of delinquents will exceed the number that are able to qualify."

Operation Problems.

Turning to the problems of management and operation, Eastman points out that railroad competition, always keen, has tended to increase as traffic has diminished in volume. As the railroads have been subjected more and more to competition from motor vehicles, waterways, pipe lines and airplanes, they have competed more fiercely among themselves. Much waste in railroad operation has resulted. To secure competitive traffic, a road may reduce rates or make some concession in service. For a time it reaps an advantage. Then competing lines follow suit, with the result that the advantage is lost and all are worse off than before. This, Eastman says, is the usual cycle in such competitive practices.

He cites examples of waste and duplication of effort among the railroads (153 major railroads, forming 101 systems). In a transcontinental movement, at least two and as many as eight or 10 carriers will each expend as much effort as they would expend if the car were handled locally. In other words, each of the participating carriers duplicates the work of each of the others. Individual carriers seek marginal traffic which often pays little above out-of-pocket expense. This is exemplified in circuitous routes, sometimes twice as long as the more direct route.

The problem of meeting the competition of other forms of transportation, Eastman says, should have brought the roads together in collective experimenttaion, but the old spirit of competition has held them apart.

"The general situation, in brief," he says, "is one in which the numerous separate owners and managers of individual parts of the single railroad system are in need of a 'more perfection union,' just as the states were prior to the Constitution. The time is propitious for such a moment, because the competition which the railroads now have from other transportation agencies makes intense competition within their own ranks a much less sacred thing than it once was from the public point of view."

Roads Have Two Masters.

Public regulation of an industry, Eastman points out in another section of his report, necessarily gives the industry two masters—the private management responsible to the stockholders and an agency responsible to the Government. Under this division of authority it is difficult to concentrate responsibility. Moreover, a regulated industry is in danger of loss of enterprise because of this division of authority and also because of the time and effort which its officials must give to the processes of regulation. The tendency in such an industry may be to look to the Government for help, where self-help would be the better policy. There is a tendency also, Eastman continues, to magnify the virtues of high rates, and to look to increases in rates for relief from low earnings, where such increase may in the long run be unwise.

The difficulties inherent in regulation of the railroads by the Federal Government are complicated by the fact that the states also undertake regulation.

Among the other ills seen by Eastman is the indifference of railroad directorships to the doctrines of trusteeship. What we now have, for the most part, he says, is private ownership, combined with self perpetuating managements for whose selection the actual owners are only nominally responsible.

"Much has been said," he adds, "of the domination of the railroads by the large financial interests. Certain New York financial houses, chiefly J. P. Morgan and Company and Kuhn, Loeb and Company, have for a long time had a practical monopoly in the marketing of the securities of many railroad companies. This has given them a position of influence, and at times of domination, in railroad affairs."

Because of the existence of all these ills. Eastman believes some better way of operating the railroads must be found and submits his tentative plan for Government ownership and operation. He does not favor the 'grand consolidation" idea.

"Much will depend," he says in his summing up, "upon the railroad managements. They are of one mind in opposition to public ownership and operation, and in general they are against grand consolidation plans. One or the other of these remedies, however, will eventually be applied, unless the managements are able to remedy present ills in some other way.

'This alternative, if it be possible, can only take the form of a better organization of the railroad industry which will enable them to deal collectively and effectively with matters which concern them all. The managements must pull together instead of pulling against each other in a great variety of different directions. The difficulties are great, and I am not at all sure that they can be surmounted.

"The tendency to cling to assumed individual advantages in preference to those which would be gained by co-ordination or correlation is ingrained, and, it may be, impossible to overcome. But it is well that the managements should have the chance to apply the principles of statesmanship, and with the help of the Government, at least at the outset. Much will be learned in the process."

League Reform Aim of Italy Is Fascism

League of Nations to a council of the Great Powers would be to return to the methods of old-time diplomacy. Neither Belgium, the Little Entente, nor France can hear of such a thing.

We agree with Lord Cecil in denouncing this oligarchic project, attempt to return to the system of the holy alliance. The London Times presents arguments with which we are unable to agree when it declares it is ridiculous that affairs which do not concern the League should be settled in Geneva.

But it is exactly in this that consists the interest and novelty of the League. To countries in conflict it offers an arbiter. If the League is to be reformed, it seems to us it should be democratized, not replaced by a council of Great Powers.

If, as the London Times suggests, the League is to become only a meeting place for nations in dispute, then it will become little better than an international duelling ground.

It is possible Germany will condition its return to Geneva upon reform of the League. It is possible Italy has been informed of this during Foreign Under-Secretary Suvitch's visit to Berlin recently.

The American View.

As for the United States, I observe that the Fascist proposition is being discussed at the very moment when Secretary of State Hull, at Montevideo, is studying the possibility of joining up the Pan-American Union, the International Labor Bureau, and the League of Nations. If we are correctly informed, this proposition has been submitted for study to a commission.

Meanwhile, who does not see that the United States cannot in any way agree with this reactionary Fascist conception of an overlordship of the Great Powers? That would be to revive the holy alliance. Who has forgotten that the Monroe Doctrine in 1823 was born of the legitimate dislike of Americans for so reactionary a conception.

Resuming and concluding, we do not say that the pact of the League of Nations should not be amended, that it should not be made more independent of the peace treaties. But we do not want this done according to the Fascist and Hitlerian plan.

No Hierarchy Wanted.

We wish it democratized. We do not want a hierarchy set up among peoples. In its present form, it reconciles the principle of equality among nations, a principle essentially French, with the actual situation in which the Great Powers exist, but they must express themselves through the medium of the Council of the League.

We cannot believe that the United States will subscribe to a conception with which all their doctrines are in conflict. We hope also that Great Britain will bring its traditional liberalism into play against this attempt to establish international Fascism.

If you ask us French: Will you permit the League of Nations to be changed in a sense more favorable to domination by the Great Powers, there is no doubt of our reply.

It is no—short, but clear.

EX-GOV. CAULFIELD RESIGNS FROM PWA ADVISORY BOARD

He Pleads Pressure of Private Business; No Announcement as to Successor.

Former Governor Henry S. Caulfield yesterday announced his resignation from the State PWA Advisory Board, effective last Jan. 15. No announcement has been made of selection of his successor.

In letters to President Roosevelt and Secretary of the Interior Ickes, Gov. Caulfield said the pressure of private business made it necessary for him to resign. He received a letter from Secretary Ickes, accepting his resignation and thanking him for his services.

Harry Scullin of St. Louis is chairman of the Board, and William Hirth, of Columbia, is the other member. The Board, appointed last summer, reviews applications for PWA funds, and submits its recommendations to Washington.

Some More Shows Are Really Booked For This Winter

Joe Cook in "Hold Your Horses" and Katharine Cornell in Three Plays Among the Offerings Still to Come to the American — Little Theater to Present "Distant Drums" for 9 Nights, Starting Next Thursday

WITH the departure, last night, of Walter Hampden and his company the American Theater goes dark again with no "legit" offerings in sight until late next month when, according to present plans, Joe Cook will come along with the big Winter Garden musical, "Hold Your Horses." Cook and his associated players are now appearing in Chicago and St. Louis is listed to follow the engagement there.

The American will devote a week in March to Katharine Cornell, who has been on a jaunt to the Pacific Coast. Miss Cornell will offer a repertory of three plays—"The Barretts of Wimpole Street," Shaw's "Candida" and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

The American also expects a visit from Katharine Hepburn in "The Lake," now playing in New York. "Let 'Em Eat Cake," sequel to last year's Pulitzer Prize musical comedy, "Of Thee I Sing," is scheduled to stop in St. Louis for a week on a tour that began last week in Washington.

AHEAD of all of these prospective shows will come "Distant Drums," as the third play of the present season to be presented by the Little Theater of St. Louis, which will begin a nine-day engagement beginning next Thursday night in the Little Theater's auditorium in the Artists' Guild Building, Union boulevard and Enright avenue.

Director F. Cowles Strickland is coaching a carefully selected cast in final rehearsals of the Dan Totheroh play, a New York success of two seasons ago. Ann Peek, who received much praise for her portrayal of the leading role in "The Devil Passes," is again cast in the leading feminine role in "Distant Drums." A large cast in support includes Charity Grace, Alice Widmer, Virginia Reilly, Mathilde Leimkeuhler, Irene Dicke, Francs Feist, Bruce MacFarlane, J. P. Feist, Eugene Wood, Norvell Brasch, Percy Ramsey, Fred Hirsch, Raymond Vogelweid, John Mainhardt and R. D. Howes. Miss Peek will be seen in the role created by Pauline Lord in the original New York company when it played at the Belasco Theater.

"Distant Drums" is a drama of the early American pioneer. A little band, traveling in covered wagons, has set out in a long trek across the country to claim land in the new section called Oregon.

The Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening performances, as is customary with the Little Theater group, have been sold to special subscription audiences. The play opens to the public beginning with the Monday evening, Feb. 5, performance.

New Burlesque Revue Heads Garrick Bill

The new burlesque revue, "Laffin' Thru," opened yesterday at the Garrick Theater. Marian LaMarr, recently of the Irving Place Theater of New York, is prominent with the show as featured performer. Others include Ada Leonard, Ruth Wilson, Joyce Rogers and Connie Marmen. Jimmie Rose has been held over with "Laffin' Thru." Carrie Finnell, another favorite, is in her last week of the present engagement.

McCarey to Direct Mae West's Latest

Leo McCarey will direct Mae West in her next picture, "It Ain't No Sin," following completion of "Six of a Kind," with Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth and George Burns and Gracie Allen.

Miss West has nearly completed the dialogue on her original story. Production is expected to start within three weeks.

The Week's New Films

—:— By NIE —:—

MAYBE you are tired of war pictures, but if you can stand another one "I Was a Spy," at the Fox, is well worth seeing. Made in England—and carefully and understandingly made, too—it tells how a Belgian girl inadvertently became a secret service agent for the allies and how she almost faced a German firing squad. She would have, too, if Herbert Marshall hadn't stepped forward and taken all the blame. Since Conrad Veidt, who gives a splendid performance as the German commander, was anxious to save Madeleine Carroll's life, he shot Herbert instead and let Madeleine live to see the English army march into the town a little later. On the same program, really billed as the No. 1 feature, but not deserving that honor, is "Long Lost Father," which has John Barrymore playing a lighter and more entertaining role than usual. This time John is a rather worthless chap who lives by his wits and bumps into his daughter whom he deserted 20 years before. She is a cabaret entertainer by this time and needs a father to guide her. John, going straight at the moment, has to return to some of his old swindling ways to get her out of a bad hole. The picture gets off to a good start, but slows down considerably before it is half over.

Love Finds a Way.

IN "Gallant Lady," down at Loew's, Ann Harding made one little mistake. She let her boy friend start off on a flight around the world without marrying him when a marriage was pretty necessary. Then, when he was killed, right at the start of his trip, Ann was left with a baby on her hands and nobody to turn to for help except Clive Brook, who was a doctor by profession, but preferred drinking. After the baby arrived Ann gave him up—the baby, not Clive—and turned her hand to interior decorating. She became rich and famous and then met her little son over in Paris. She wants to claim him and announce to the world her folly, but good old Clive, who is always on hand with a bottle in one hand and a lot of advice in the other, points out what that would mean to the child's future. The long arm of coincidence, which is stretched rather far several times in the story, is able to make one more effort and snatches away the nice lady who had adopted the boy. Her husband, who is nice, too, and rich, is thus left free and Ann sets out to land him. At first it was just a business proposition with her, but before very long she is really in love with him and so everything ends very nicely for all except good old Clive, who is left, rather out in the cold, to carry on his drinking alone. Dickie Moore is the youngster and Otto Kruger the adopted father and the picture is further embellished by Tuillio Carminati, who plays an Italian count and sings magnificently.

Men in White.

BEGINNING a new round of hospital films, "Once to Every Woman" comes to the St. Louis to show how love and surgery can get all tangled up in a big city institution. As a matter of fact, the title is a little off, for Fay Wray gets a couple of chances to fall in love, and does. Since one of the affairs was not strictly on the up and up, maybe the name is OK after all. Fay was a head nurse in the hospital where Ralph Bellamy and Walter Byron were young physicians. Fay was in love with the latter, while Doc. Bellamy was in love with her. Byron turns out to be a two-timer and Fay, who is pretty well wrapped up in her profession, sees that Ralph is not only a better man but a better surgeon when he performs a delicate brain operation on a patient. The operation is the high point of the picture and is tense and thrilling, even though it is rather technical. There is some laughter in the play and plenty of chances for a good cry so that "Once to Every Woman" is excellent screen fare. Also on the St. Louis' bill is "Ace of Aces," in which Richard Dix becomes a war aviator against his will and makes good in a big way.

Front Page Stuff.

THERE never was a newspaper like the one shown in "Hi, Nellie," at the Ambassador, nor a newspaper man like Paul Muni but, even so, the picture will prove highly entertaining and exciting to the layman who doesn't know what goes on in a real print shop. Paul was the managing editor of a paper who didn't get along with the owner, but he couldn't be fired because he had an iron bound contract. This document, unfortunately, didn't say that he was to have any regular job so the Big Boss makes him editor of the Woman's Page, where he has to write advice to the lovelorn under the title of Nellie Nelson. Everybody kids him, but he sticks to his knitting and when the time comes uncovers a big murder story without waiting for orders from any of his superiors. The way he went about it was enough to have broken any contract ever drawn, but Paul gets away with it, for film purposes, and rides back to his own job and success. Also he wins Glenda Farrell, a hard-boiled sob sister on the old rag. As said before it just couldn't happen, but it's great fun and, at times, plenty exciting. Even real newspaper men will enjoy the way Paul talks back to his boss—and do a little wishing.

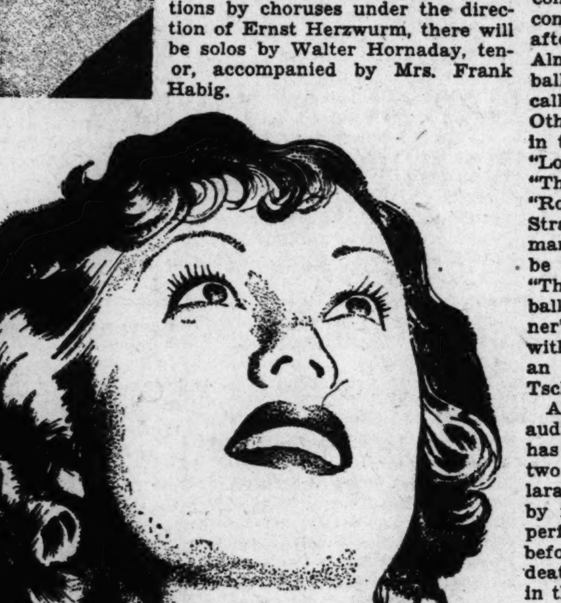
Murder in India.

EDMUND LOWE is one of those Master Minds in "Bombay Mail" at the Missouri. All of the scenes are laid on a train going from somewhere to Bombay with a murder, some hidden jewels and a lot of other impedimenta to give Inspector Lowe plenty to do. It's a good detective mystery meller and the identity of the real bad man is carefully hidden until the last moment. Of course, before that you are led to suspect everyone else in the play, but Officer Lowe goes about solving the affair in the best Sherlock Holmes manner and keeps the customers guessing until the time comes for the picture to end. Another good film on the Missouri's double bill is "Easy to Love," a pretty broad farce about marriage entanglements which is funny every foot of the way. Adolphe Menjou, Edward Everett Horton, Genevieve Tobin and Mary Astor are in it with Guy Kibbee saved for a great comedy part almost at the finish of the picture. Not strictly recommended for children "Easy to Love" is full of fun for the grown ups.

China Movie Queen Joins Raft's Cast

The Movie Queen of Shanghai, China, has just arrived in Hollywood and already has a part in a "Bolero," featuring George Raft, Sally Rand and Carole Lombard. She is Nina Barsamova, chosen by the International Rotary Club of Asia and sponsored on a six-month trip.



Fay Wray in "Once to Every Woman," at the St. Louis.

Fritz Kreisler Here For Annual Concert At Odeon Thursday

FRITZ KREISLER, long outstanding among the masters of the violin, pays his annual visit to St. Louis this week, being presented in recital at the Odeon next Thursday evening, at 8:15. Kreisler will present a program of generous proportions, playing the Beethoven C minor sonata for violin, with Carl Lamson at the piano, the Bach G minor sonata for violin alone, and then, following the intermission will present a large group of lesser pieces, many of them his own transcriptions.

Kreisler is one of the most versatile of artists. So great an authority as Harold Bauer declares that an equally great pianist was lost to the world when Kreisler took up the violin. Yet it was as a violinist that St. Louis first knew him, when he appeared in a series of six concerts here with Mortiz Rosenthal in February, 1889. Kreisler then was a boy of 14 making his first American tour.

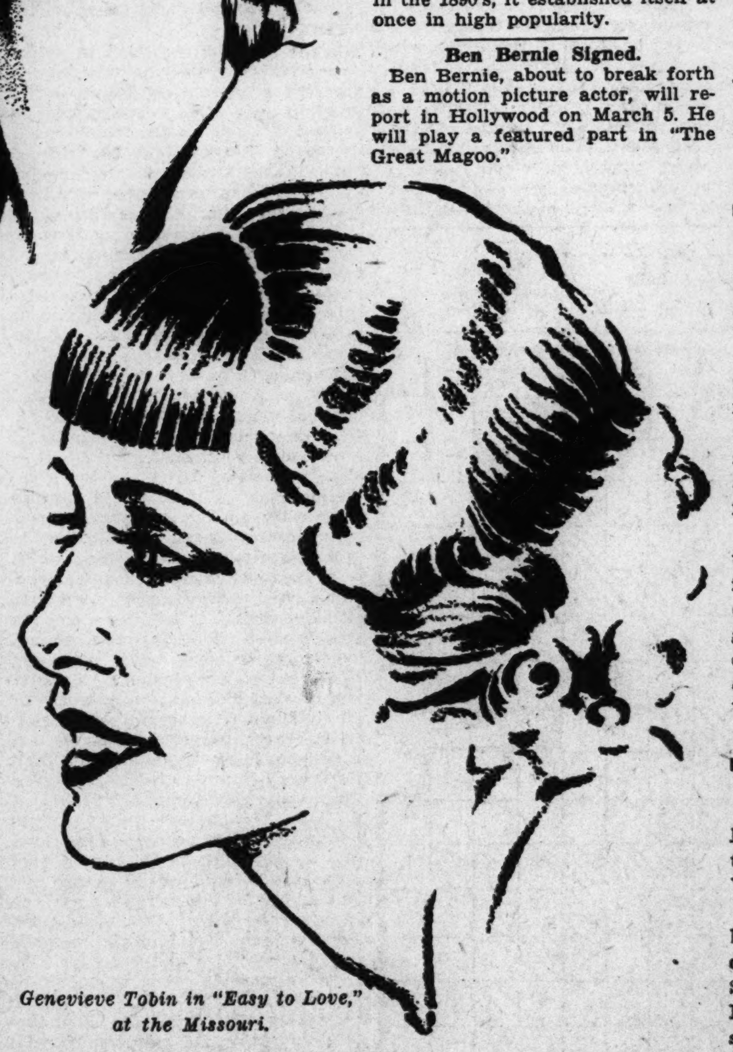
Two works by Rimsky-Korsakoff, "The Hymn to the Sun" and his "Fantasia on Russian Themes," and two by the late Spanish composer, Albeniz, a Malaguena and a tango, are scheduled in his program here.

Y. H. Club's Play Tonight.

"Ladies of the Jury" will be presented by the Dramatic Club of the Y. M. H. A.-Y. W. H. A. this evening in the "Y" Auditorium, Union and Enright. The cast includes: Esther Felberbaum, Sylvia Minkowitz, Ruth Lee Raban, Sylvia Rosenblatt, Adele Palant, Sara Finkelstein, Meyer Fiman, Leonard Blumenthal, David Seslen, Sam Lewin, Orville Miller, Robert Feldman, Simon Becker, Al Gelfand, Eli Spielberg, Harvey L. Goodman, Harry Adelstein, Lillian Blumenthal, Sara Ziff, Sylvia Silverberg, Hyman Adelstein and Dorothy Smolen.

Choral Concert by Liederkranz.

A concert of choral music will be presented Wednesday evening at Alhambra Grotto, 2626 South Grand, by members of the Liederkranz Club. Besides a group of selections by choruses under the direction of Ernst Herzwurm, there will be solos by Walter Hornaday, tenor, accompanied by Mrs. Frank Habig.



Genevieve Tobin in "Easy to Love," at the Missouri.

Gershwin and Melton Concert With Previn at the Odeon

GEORGE GERSHWIN, composer and pianist, will be heard in a concert at the Odeon next Wednesday nigfit along with James Melton, well known radio tenor. An orchestra of some 40 musicians will be conducted, on the occasion, by Charles Previn, former conductor of the Municipal Opera and, for four years, leader of the orchestras at the Ambassador and Missouri theaters. Previn, incidentally, was the conductor of Gershwin's first musical comedy, "La, La, Lucille,"

The concert will feature Gershwin successes in music, chiefly the "Rhapsody in Blue," "Concerto in F," and "An American in Paris," among other compositions. Gershwin airs from the music of five of George White's "Scandals," from "Tip Toes," "Funny Face," "Lady Be Good!" and other incidental music will also be presented by Gershwin, as piano soloist, and by the orchestra.

Melton will sing the cowboy ballads and spirituals with which he is identified.

Negro Singers in Concert.

The Celestial Choristers, a group of Negro singers, trained by C. Spencer Tocus, will give a concert at the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, Hamilton and Julian avenue, on Friday evening, Feb. 2.

Request Program As Symphony Bill In Week's Concert

Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Work to Be Major Offering by Orchestra at the Odeon, Friday and Saturday.

TSCHAIKOWSKY'S "Pathetic" symphony will be the major work on the request program which Vladimir Golschmann will conduct at the regular symphony concerts at the Odeon next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Almost one-fifth of the 545 requests ballots cast by symphony patrons called for the Tschaikowsky work. Other works which were favorites in the balloting included Wagner's "Lohengrin" prelude; Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Rosenkavalier" waltzes of Richard Strauss. Of these Conductor Golschmann has made up the program to be offered this week. Respighi's "The Pines of Rome," second in the ballotting with 82 votes, and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," fifth with 69, could not be combined in an effective program with the Tschaikowsky symphony.

Always a favorite with Odeon audiences, the "Pathetic" symphony has not been heard in St. Louis for two seasons. It is a musical declaration of faith—or the lack of it—by its composer and had its first performance in Leningrad shortly before Tschaikowsky's sudden death. Introduced to this country in the 1890's, it established itself at once in high popularity.

Ben Bernie Signed.

Ben Bernie, about to break forth as a motion picture actor, will report in Hollywood on March 5. He will play a featured part in "The Great Magoo."

The Battle of the Tenors

By H. H. NIEMEYER.

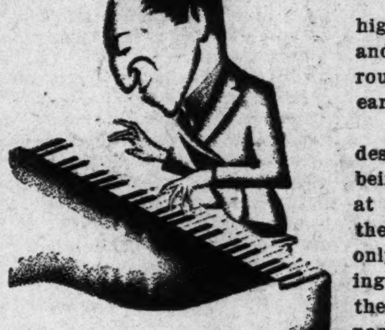
ONE of the great sights we encountered during our recent visit to the Land of Make Believe was the Battle of the Tenors which is now going on out in Hollywood. Not as many casualties, to be sure, as there were in the recent floods there but, still, the battle is just getting under way and no one can tell what may happen.

Bing Crosby staggers his competitors with two "ba-ba-boos" where only one "la-de-da" was heard before.

Lanny Ross counters with a high "C" that shakes the rafters and Joe Morrison looses a sonorous blast that assails a million ears.

It's the battle of crooners—a desperate tenor fight which is being waged to the last harmonic at the Paramount studios, with the other cinema factories, with only a single singer apiece, looking on and wondering when they will be drawn into the carnage.

Unquestionably, the screen is going vocal melodiously, and music fills the air. And while music hath charms, the reverberating notes of the songsters, swelling in volume with the passage of each week, must sound like a discordant jangle as echoes invade the dressing rooms of such non-crooning and non-singing stars as Fredric March, William Powell, John Barrymore, Will Rogers, George Raft, Richard Arlen, Randolph Scott, Gary Cooper, W. C. Fields and Larry "Buster" Crabbe.



George Gershwin in a concert at the Odeon, Wednesday night.

For the studio is falling before the onslaught of the vocalists whose forces, if not superior in number, at least are louder.

IT all started with the rapid ascension of Bing Crosby, ace of crooners, who came to the screen from the late spots and the ether waves and, surprising no one more than himself, turned out to be quite an actor in addition to having the sort of voice that makes otherwise dutiful wives neglect their husbands' dinners.

Crosby was what the movie industry terms a "smash hit" in "The Big Broadcast." Skeptics said he simply was a current rage, a passing idol among the collegiate crowd whose popularity would wane with the coming of a new rhumba rhythm or some new trend in song styles.

Crosby fooled 'em. He applied himself to histrionics as well as lyrics and his fan mail began to indicate the acquisition of a bigger and more varied following than he ever had enjoyed in the single role of crooner. He followed with pictures which undoubtedly seemed to justify the idea of a singer turning actor, among them "College Humor," "Too Much Harmony" and more recently his appearance with Marion Davies in "Going Hollywood." And the rush was on.

In recent weeks Paramount has signed songsters galore; not for their voices alone, but because Crosby has demonstrated to the more alert movie minds that an individual who has become a widely known personality through his vocal ability, may equally well grace the screen, both becomingly and profitably.

THERE'S Lanny Ross, whose tenor voice is known to millions of listeners-in through his work on the "Showboat Hour" continuities. Paramount discovered what his unseen audience might never have known, that Lanny is a former Yale athlete and a fine looking fellow. He's at work right now, making his screen debut in "Melody in Spring," with Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland.

Another is Joe Morrison, under contract but as yet not reported for duty, whom the studio is planning to "bring along" in roles that most any of the established dramatic players would not be inclined to regard lightly. Morrison, a featured vocalist with George Olsen's band, has won many plaudits and, by the same token, caused a lot of people to insist he has much to live down. He popularized "The Last Roundup."

Carl Brisson, the Danish star, who is the most recent vocalist to arrive on the lot, toured the English provinces for two years in "The Merry Widow" and appeared in a long series of musical comedies and musical films abroad. He's a former fighter, as ruggedly built as he is handsome. Which probably will smother a lot of wise cracks about crooners before they have a chance to become audible. He's slated for a leading role in "Murder at the Vanities," which is one of the pictures on the winter's program.

THE list grows longer with the inclusion of Julian Madison, stage vocalist and orchestra leader of the Middle West, who won a contract as a result of his work in "Search for Beauty;" Jack Haley, former Ambassador Theater favorite, who drew attention to himself pairing with Jack Oakie in "Sitting Pretty," and Walter Woolf, former musical comedy star.

And, of course, out at Fox is none other than Rudy Vallee, the king-pin crooner of all time who has just finished making his part of a big Fox musical. Then, at Warners, is Dick Powell, another St. Louis favorite, who has shown brightly at the Ambassador. Dick, by the way, is looked upon as the most promising of all screen juveniles and his fan mail today is the largest batch on the Warner lot.

If all these lyric limners were to start a little serious vocalizing at the same time, the result would be pretty terrible without a few sopranos to offset the baritones.

Consequently, in "The Man Who Broke His Heart" the studio has cast Dorothy Dell, who was "Miss Universe" in 193[illegible] and who popularized the song hit "Was I Drunk, Was He Handsome, Did My Mother Give Me Hell!" in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Ethel Merman, torch singer of "Girl Crazy," George White's "Scandals" and "Take a Chance" on the New York stage, makes her first featured screen appearance in "We're Not Dressing" with the aforementioned Crooner Crosby, who started it all.

Joan Marsh, who has been singing over a coast to coast network on the "California Melodies" hour, also has a new contract. And Kitty Carlisle, at present in "Champagne Sec" in New York, is due to arrive soon for a featured spot in "Murder at the Vanities."

In the face of this invasion it would seem that the studio music departments will have to be enlarged. At present at Paramount, it occupies space alongside one of the furthermost stages on the lot—probably because one of the studio executives disliked Tin Pan Alley sounds with his conference

NEW INDUSTRIES GIVE 10,507 JOBS IN CITY IN 1933

Largest Expansion Since Founding of Industrial Club Six Years Ago, Due Mainly to Beer.

$9,512,000 CAPITAL INVESTED IN PLANTS

129 Factories Began Operations and 119 Others Increase Facilities — Trend Toward Large Firms.

Employment resulting from establishment of new industries and expansions in the St. Louis industrial district during 1933 was the largest ever recorded by the Industrial Club since it was organized six years ago, the Industrial Bureau of the club stated in its annual summary issued yesterday.

New employes required as a result of new industries and expansions in 1933 totaled 10,507, compared with 2442 in 1932, according to the summary. The return of beer was the principal cause of increased employment.

Industrial capital invested in the St. Louis industrial district during 1933 totaled $9,512,191, the largest amount spent since 1930, and an increase of $4,766,641, or 100.5 per cent, over such expenditures during 1932.

Establishment of 129 new industries and the expansion of 119 existing industries were recorded by the Industrial Bureau of the Club during 1933. The new industries recorded for 1933 represented an increase of 12.3 per cent over the number for 1932.

The Industrial Bureau announced that "in addition to the actual investment of more than $9,500,000 there was definitely allocated to future industrial expansion a total of $12,500,000 by the new and expanding industries of 1933."

Organization of larger companies, and more extensive expansions, were a feature of industrial activity in St. Louis last year, the report shows.

Expansion of Floor Space.

"Proposals for the construction of new factory and warehouse floor space also took a tremendous leap ahead of the previous year, amounting to 3,430,500 square feet, compared with less than 500,000 square feet during 1932.

"Looking forward, the new industrial year under the NRA should mark the beginning of recentralization of industry in metropolitan centers and the cessation of some decentralizing forces. With such wage differentials as are being allowed between rural and urban centers under the NRA, the generally higher skill available in the metropolitan labor market will give it a considerable advantage and be a great force in stopping industrial emigration from the large city.

"During December 19 new industries and 16 expansions of established enterprises were reported in the St. Louis Industrial District. These new industries and expansions, requiring the services of 682 additional employes, represent an added industrial investment of $1,412,-00, and have absorbed 179,060 feet of existing floor space. As a result of the changes, 30,000 square feet of new industrial space has been constructed.

Barometers for December.

"The principal St. Louis business barometers for the month of December, 1933, compared with December of the previous year may be summarized as follows: Building permits increased 61.28 per cent; bank clearings increased 4.22 per cent; debits to individual accounts decreased 3.46 per cent; post office receipts decreased 7.82 per cent; revenue cars handled by the Terminal Railroad Association increased 2.93 per cent; water consumption decreased 6.55 per cent; barge line tonnage increased 12.73 per cent; local telephone calls decreased 4.66 per cent; revenue street car and bus passengers increased 9.38 per cent on the lines of the St. Louis Public Service Co., bus revenue passengers decreased 3.34 per cent on the lines of the People's Motorbus Co., industrial gas consumption decreased 60 per cent; industrial electricity supplied by the Union Electric Light and Power Co., to 196 identical customers increased 11.16 per cent and industrial electricity supplied by the Laclede Light and Power Co., increased 7.13 per cent."

New industries for December: rysler Motor Parts Corporation, 17 Olive street; Floyd Gill Hat , 1123 Washington avenue; ring-Dawn Co., 918 South Seventh street; Adolph Busch, Inc., 9 Title Guaranty building; Sich- Neckwear Co., 1722 Washington nue; Marvel Dress, Inc., 810 Lu- avenue; Selmore Hat Co., 1232 shington avenue; Monite Co., 5 Lindell boulevard; National Equipment Corporation, 19

129 Factories Began Operations and 119 Others Increase Facilities — Trend Toward Large Firms.

Employment resulting from establishment of new industries and expansions in the St. Louis industrial district during 1933 was the largest ever recorded by the Industrial Club since it was organized six years ago, the Industrial Bureau of the club stated in its annual summary issued yesterday.

New employes required as a result of new industries and expansions in 1933 totaled 10,507, compared with 2442 in 1932, according to the summary. The return of beer was the principal cause of increased employment.

Industrial capital invested in the St. Louis industrial district during 1933 totaled $9,512,191, the largest amount spent since 1930, and an increase of $4,766,641, or 100.5 per cent, over such expenditures during 1932.

Establishment of 129 new industries and the expansion of 119 existing industries were recorded by the Industrial Bureau of the Club during 1933. The new industries recorded for 1933 represented an increase of 12.3 per cent over the number for 1932.

The Industrial Bureau announced that "in addition to the actual investment of more than $9,500,000 there was definitely allocated to future industrial expansion a total of $12,500,000 by the new and expanding industries of 1933."

Organization of larger companies, and more extensive expansions, were a feature of industrial activity in St. Louis last year, the report shows.

Expansion of Floor Space.

"Proposals for the construction of new factory and warehouse floor space also took a tremendous leap ahead of the previous year, amounting to 3,430,500 square feet, compared with less than 500,000 square feet during 1932.

"Looking forward, the new industrial year under the NRA should mark the beginning of re-centralization of industry in metropolitan centers and the cessation of some decentralizing forces. With such wage differentials as are being allowed between rural and urban centers under the NRA, the generally higher skill available in the metropolitan labor market will give it a considerable advantage and be a great force in stopping industrial emigration from the large city.

"During December 19 new industries and 16 expansions of established enterprises were reported in the St. Louis Industrial District. These new industries and expansions, requiring the services of 682 additional employes, represent an added industrial investment of $1,412,-000, and have absorbed 179,060 feet of existing floor space. As a result of the changes, 30,000 square feet of new industrial space has been constructed.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN AGENCY LISTS INSURANCE RULES

Bulletin Emphasizes Fire Policies Are Required for All Properties for Which Aid Is Given.

Insurance methods of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation covering both fire insurance and windstorm insurance in certain localities are described in a bulletin issued by the corporation.

Emphasizing that the corporation does not intend to interfere with local insurance business, the bulletin points out that the corporation "will require that all properties securing loans be insured against loss or destruction by fire in an insurance company licensed where the property is situated," and adds that "windstorm insurance may likewise be required in certain territories."

The bulletin continues: "The corporation will accept any existing policy in any licensed company, whether stock, mutual or reciprocal, and will not require its borrowers to take out insurance for any given period of time. The loan contract requires the borrower to renew his insurance on expiration, and failure to do so constitutes a default in his loan.

"Fire insurance in amount at least equivalent to the amount of the indebtedness to the corporation or the full insurable value of the improvements on the property, whichever is smaller, will be required in all cases. (In the event of total loss, the corporation either wants the improvements replaced or the loan liquidated.)"

"It is assumed that all home owners whose property is encumbered will be insured, and therefore have a policy to transfer to the corporation. If the existing insurance is not sufficient to meet our requirements and is not within $100 of the amount of our loan (when said amount is less than the full insurable value of improvements), then the balance must be furnished by the borrower at his own expense.

"In all cases the home owners are to be impressed with the fact that they must buy, pay for, and continue their fire insurance. Likewise, if additional insurance is required, the owner should pay for the same if possible, but if unable to do so, the corporation will advance the three-year premium.

It is required that the corporation form of mortgage clause as printed be attached to all policies on homes securing its loans, making the insurance payable to the corporation, as its interest may appear. If for legal or other reasons, such mortgage clause cannot be attached, then the New York and New Jersey standard mortgage clause (without contribution) is desired, and if this clause cannot be secured, the best form of mortgage clause or loss payable clause obtainable in the territory where the insurance is to be written, is to be secured.

"The mortgage clause or loss payable clause should be assigned to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or, if, as in some states, a trustee is required, then the person designated should be as trustee for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and no trustee or state employe should be designated as mortgagee personally but always as trustee for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and only in states where this is the practice.

"The home owner must procure all insurance and all renewals of said insurance through a reputable local agent of his own choice in a company licensed where the property is located."

By the Associated Press.

TULSA, Ok., Jan. 27.—Helen Lincoln, 17 years old, who quit school for a dancing career, lay paralyzed in a hospital here today, dangerously wounded, while police held her 24-year-old sweetheart without charge because it was his pistol that was fired accidentally into her spine.

The shooting occurred on the mezzanine floor of a large hotel here yesterday where Martin had taken the girl to plead his cause. AWARDED $230 IN SUIT OVER SERVICES TO UNCLE Nephew Said He Had Agreement With Sister and Brother of Late Charles Troll.

A verdict for $230 was returned by a jury in Circuit Judge O'Malley's court yesterday in favor of John Ouhrabka, 4012 Castleman avenue, against his aunt, Miss Anna Troll, and uncle, Harry Troll, an attorney.

The judgment is based on services rendered to their brother, the late Charles Troll, Republican politician, when he was a patient at the Firmin Desloge Hospital last March 1 to May 1. Ouhrabka said the defendants agreed to reimburse him if he would wait on their brother, acting as nurse and attendant.

In compliance with the agreement he served 12 to 15 hours a day during the period mentioned but was paid only $75, he said. He estimated the reasonable value of his services at $5 a day.

Miss Troll and her brother denied hiring Ouhrabka, who was represented by Attorney Crittenden E. Clark. They said the plaintiff was on friendly terms with his uncle and called at the hospital to see him, on some occasions to get Charles Troll to assist him in finding employment.

The case was appealed to the Circuit Court from a Justice of the Peace, who had also decided in favor of the nephew.

IN MEMORIAM

FISCHER, CORA—In loving memory of our dear mother, who departed from this life Jan. 31, 1932:

Her smiling ways and pleasant face
Are a pleasure to recall.
She had a kindly word for each
And died beloved by all.
Some day we hope to meet her,
Some day, we know not when,
To clasp her hand in a better land,
Never to part again.
Sadly missed by CHILDREN.

KILIAN, RAYMOND—In loving remembrance of our dear son and brother, who departed this life on Jan. 24, 1933.

One year ago he passed away,
We grieved when he departed;
Time was too short to say farewell
To those he knew and loved so well.
We miss his coming footsteps,
We miss him everywhere,
Home is not what it used to be
Since Raymond is not there.
Sadly missed by his parents, brother and sister and all who loved him.

MAYER, MARY—In loving memory of our dear mother who passed away Jan. 23, 1930.

Four years have passed since God called you.
The call was short, the shock severe;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
Some may think you are forgotten,
But to us your memory is as dear today
As in the hour you passed away.
Saldly missed by CHILDREN.

POERTNER, DOROTHEA—In memory of our dear mother, who went to her heavenly home Jan. 28, 1933.

Sleep on, dearest mother; it has been one long year
Since you left our hearts filled with sadness and tears.
Yours was a heart that was blithesome and gay
Scattering sunshine all along the way.
You know how we loved you, and, yes, love you yet;
Though God took you from us, we cannot forget.
Sadly missed by
CHILDREN AND GRANDCHILDREN.

REITHEL, HENRY C.—A loving tribute to the memory of Henry C. Reithel, member of M. G. Company, 356th Infantry, who was killed at Ehrang, Germany, Jan. 29, 1919.

Not mine to know the reason why,
From a loved one I should part,
But mine to live in faith and hope
With memories in my heart.
CLARA.

RISKA, ANNA—In loving memory of our dear wife and mother, who passed away Jan. 30, 1933:

While she lies in peaceful sleep,
Her memory we shall always keep.
Sadly missed by
HUSBAND AND FAMILY.

SCHELIN, LIZZIE—In loving remembrance of our dear mother, who died Jan. 28, 1931:

The hour is as sad today
As the hour you passed away.
Sadly missed by
HUSBAND, FAMILY AND GRANDCHILDREN.

SCHMITT—In memory of Frank V. Schmitt, who passed away Feb. 1, 1925:

And while he lies in peaceful sleep,
His memory we will always keep.
Sadly missed by
BROTHER AND SISTER.

SCHOMBERG, RICHARD—In loving memory of my beloved husband and our dear father, who died three years ago Jan. 31.
Missed by WIFE AND CHILDREN.

SCHROEDER, DR. ROBERT C.—In loving memory of Dr. Robert C. Schroeder, who passed away Jan. 31, 1933.

My lips cannot tell how I miss you.
My heart cannot tell what to say.
God alone knows how I miss you,
In a home that is lonesome today.
HIS WIFE, NELLIE E. SCHROEDER.

TINIUS, HOEBER—In loving memory, who passed away a year ago, Jan. 27.
Sadly missed by
DAD AND MOTHER.

VOGELSANG—In memory of our dear mother, Mary A. Schmitt Vogelsang, who passed away Jan. 30, 1924:

At evening when twilight hours draw near,
And sunet flames the sky,
We think of you, dear mother,
And the happy days gone by.
Thoughts of you come drifting back
Within our dreams to stay.
To know that you are resting,
When the twilight ends the day.
Sadly missed by CHILDREN.

VOGELSANG—In memory of George H. Vogelsang, who departed this life Jan. 29, 1929:

Rest in peace.
Sadly missed by
WILL AND MARY.

WINKLEMEYER, MARY—In loving memory, who passed away Jan. 28, 1933. Dear mother, you are not forgotten, though on earth you are no more; still in memory you are with us, as you always were before. Sadly missed by
DAUGHTER AND SON.

WISSMANN, MISS KATE—In loving memory of our dear sister, who passed away Jan. 26, 1931.

Her memory is as dear today
As in the hour she passed away.
Sadly missed by
SISTER, BROTHER, BROTHER-IN-LAW.

New York Sugar.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Raw sugar was more active today and refiners who heretofore had been unwilling to pay above 3.20 raised their ideas 5 points with the spot market firmly established on the basis of 3.25 for duty frees.

Sales reported included about 144,000 bags of Philippines and 10,000 bags of Puerto Rican at 3.23, 50,850 bags of Philippines and 93,000 bags of Puerto Rican at 32.5 in February and March positions to local and outport refiners, and 9000 bags Philippines Mar.-April at 3.28.

Futures showed little change at the outset, but the increased demand for spots created a little more activity later and prices advanced on covering and buying by trade and Cuban interests, with final prices showing net gains of 1 to 2 points. Sales were 12,150 tons.

Reports of renewed labor difficulties among railroad workers in Cuba may have helped the upturn. March contracts sold up from 1.45 to 1.46, while December, which was the strongest position, advanced from 1.62 to 1.65.

Refined was steady and unchanged at 4.30 for fine granulated with a fair inquiry reported.

Chevrolet Delivered Cost Price Policy Explained Here by Doran

Company Has Orders on Hand to Absorb the Output of Plants for Several Months.

Felix Doran Jr., who, as assistant general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Co., is in charge of all sales activities in the Western half of the United States, was in St. Louis Friday on his first visit to this territory since his elevation to one of the most important sales executive posts in the automobile industry.

Doran said his primary object was to explain fully to his organization the significance and operating methods of Chevrolet's new policy whereby salesmen will qoute actual delivered costs of an automobile to a prospect instead of list, or F. O. B., prices.

"What the customer is primarily interested in," Doran said, "is what a car will cost delivered in front of his home. Hereafter our salesmen are going to quote him that figure. The purchaser thus will be spared the unpleasantness of discovering that in the end his car cost him more than he had originally planned.

"I am confident that this plan will enable us to deliver automobiles all over the country at a lower price to the consumer than any other make of volume car.

100,000 Orders at Local Shows.

"We introduced our 1934 models early this month at 100 special exhibits all over the country—miniature automobile shows in themselves—to a most interested and responsive public. During these showings our salesmen booked 100,000 bona fide orders for retail delivery. We have on hand sufficient orders from dealers and the public to absorb the total output of our plants for several months to come.

"The almost unbelievably fine response the public has made to our new models in terms of orders will insure the day and night operation of our plants throughout most of the spring. We will operate three shifts a day of eight hours each in the cities where our 21 domestic plants are located.

"Our plan is to get all our plants going at peak capacity so that our dealers everywhere may have models for immediate delivery. This will enable them to continue the excellent showing they made here last year in greatly out-selling every other make of car in this region."

Reports "Go Forward" Feeling.

Doran came here from the auto shows at New York and Detroit, cutting his stay short there to get to this territory. Attendance at Detroit, he said, rivaled that at the earlier New York show, and sales were proportionately greater. Both attendance and sales at the various shows thus far reported have been the best in several years, and have been surpassed few times in the history of the industry.

"We are coming back," said Doran. "There is no doubt of it. More indicative even than attendance or sales figures is the changed attitude of people—visitors and automobile men themselves. At the shows I attended almost a carnival spirit prevailed. There was more enthusiasm, more of a 'go forward' feeling, than at any show since 1928. We are coming back, and the means by which it is being accomplished is much less important than the fact itself."

Returning to the policy of quoting only actual delivered costs to the purchaser, Doran said he considered this one of the most revolutionery merchandising plans ever introduced into automobile sales practices. Chevrolet, he said, is basing the success of its entire sales administration upon the soundness of the new policy.

"Blinders Off Order Blank."

"We are going to take the blinders off the order blank," he said. "We are going to let everybody know exactly how much their car will cost them. We are going to take out to the last cent the increase between the advertised, or list, price and the actual cost to the consumer.

"We are sure we are fundamentally right ,and will profit by it as soon as the public gets a thorough appreciation of what we are trying to do. For example, while our average list price this year is up 14 per cent over last year, the actual difference to the purchaser will only be 7 per cent.

"Throughout the United States a similar condition will prevail. Actual delivered costs everywhere will be less than the average increase in list price. How much less will be determined by freight rate and other local factors.

A dinner was given last evening at the Park Plaza Hotel by Doran, which was attended by Joseph Lamy, of the Chevrolet Business Manager Service of Deroit; T. H. Keating, regional manager; C. E. O'Meara, zone manager; G. E. Holm, city manager, and other guests.

Doran, Keating and Lamy left after the dinner for Memphis, New Orleans and San Antonio, and will return to Detroit by way of Denver and Kansas City.

Chrysler Airflow Production to Begin Feb. 1, Frazer States

Production of all body styles of the Chrysler Airflow Eight, the Chrysler Imperial Eight and the new Chrysler Six will begin Feb. 1, it is announced by Joseph W. Frazer, general sales manager of the Chrysler Sales Corporation.

To make this early production possible, there has been extensive remodeling of the Chrysler plant. The large floor area released when the Chrysler executive offices moved into the new Chrysler-DeSoto administration building has been utilized in the remodeling.

Chrysler production in 1934 will be the most efficient, speediest and most economical in operation that the company has been able to achieve, according to D. A. Wallace, vice-president in charge of manufacturing.

"Improvement in the design and construction of motor trucks now closely parallels the engineering advance made from year to year in passenger cars," says Phil H. Brockman, president of the Federal Truck Co., distributers of Federal trucks. "Yet this fact is not realized to any great extent by the public, for the reason that trucks are of interest to a comparatively limited group of people only. Consequently, they are not commonly and widely discussed as are passenger cars.

"Take, for example, style. A few years ago little thought was given by truck engineers to appearance when designing new models, for buyers did not seem to care a lot what they looked like. It was the popular idea in those days that a truck had to be built like a steam roller. The front end was usually adorned with a homely iron radiator shell, a short stubby hood, straight dash and flat fenders. The result generally was an ungainly looking vehicle.

"Now, however, eye appeal is of great importance in trucks. Operators more and more have come to realize that an attractive appearing truck is of definite value in the way of advertising and, like passenger car buyers, they are now demanding style. As a result, many of the trucks that you see on the road today are smart, sleek looking vehicles.

"On the new Federal 'models, for instance, there is a handsome sloping V-type chrome plated radiator with an attractive grill, chrome-plated headlights, twin horns and bumper, a long streamline hood and cowl with door type ventilators and wide sweeping front fenders. The driver's cab has a sloping windshield enclosed in a chrome-plated frame. Viewed from the front end the complete ensemble is very similar in appearance to the latest passenger car lines."

Chevrolet Delivered Prices Policy Liked by Public and Dealer

An immediate public response, expressed in terms of orders for retail delivery, greeted the announcement this week that hereafter Chevrolet dealers would quote only actual delivered costs instead of the conventional "f. o. b." prices on new cars and trucks.

This "new deal" in automobile merchandising, designed to drive into the open every item entering into the cost of a car to the purchaser, has been instrumental in enabling dealers to book 85,000 orders for retail delivery of new cars, according to reports to William E. Holler, general sales manager of the company.

The immediate result of the new policy was a flood of wires and expressions of appreciation from dealers and public to Holler, commending his new plan.

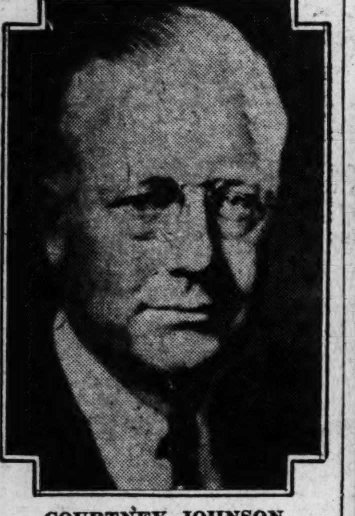
"Hereafter," he said, "we are going to quote only final delivered prices. The customer wants to know how much his automobile will cost standing in front of his home. Under our new plan, he will be spared the unpleasantness of discovering that his car eventually cost him many dollars more than he originally planned.

"The expressions I have already received from dealers and the public indicate that the plan won quicker and more enthusiastic general support than we had believed possible. The public naturally has welcomed a plan which ends doubts and misunderstandings; and, the dealers are equally enthusiastic about it because it facilitates their dealings with prospective customers.

Men Rated as Better Drivers.

Tests by the Iowa State College show that men really are better car drivers than women. Women are inclined to kill the engine, cut more corners, clash the gears and make unnecessary flourishes in getting their cars started. The conclusions were reached after testing 1000 drivers of nearly equal experience.

NEW SALES MANAGER FOR NASH CO.



COURTNEY JOHNSON

Newly appointed general sales manager of the Nash Motors Co., who has attended 20 of the 34 auto shows held in large cities since Jan. 1. He reports steadily increasing sales and dealer orders for the new Nash models as well as for the brand new low-priced growing demand for dealerships. In 1928 Johnson was general sales manager of the Hudson Motor Car Co. In 1931 he joined the General Motors executive sales staff. In 1932 he was made assistant general manager of the Buick-Oldsmobile-Pontiac sales organization. C. P. Turner has been appointed Eastern sales manager for Nash and M. N. Larson, Western sales manager. Both were formerly assistant sales managers.

Ford Sales Increase As January Draws to End, Johnson Says

Production Schedule for Month Increased From 45,000 to 55,000 Units.

Figures for two-thirds of January show that passenger car sales are increasing in volume toward the latter part of the month, according to M. N. Johnson, St. Louis manager of the Ford Motor Co., who last week said that January was the largest first month in sales for Ford since 1930.

"The Ford Motor Co. originally scheduled production of 45,000 units in January," said Johnson, "but since has increased to 55,000 units."

"Our schedule of deliveries in this territory was increased likewise. Fortunately, we were in position to make immediately delivery of new 1934 Ford V-8's which has resulted in our showing a 10 per cent increase in the second 10 days of January over the first 10-day period.

"The last 10-day period of this month should be the biggest in the history of the Ford V-8 sales in the St. Louis branch."

Alemite Lubrication System on All but Two Makes of Cars

An unusual record has been established by Stewart-Warner Corporation's subsidiary the Alemite Corporation, in achieving a 99 per cent mark in the automobile industry. All but two of the well-known makes of automobiles specify Alemite hydraulic lubrication system as standard equipment on the 1934 models.

The hydraulic system was introduced to the industry for the first time early last fall. It combines the features of both preceding systems—the Alemite pin type and the Alemite push type. It has the locking security of the former and the quick and easy action of the latter: An exclusive feature is the increased pressure up to 10,000 pounds—obtainable with the new hydraulic system, yet requireing no manual force to hold the coupling on the fitting.

A feature is the positive seal against leakage of lubricant while the gun is in operation.

W. H. Miller Named As Branch Manager For Goodyear Co. Here

—By Watton Studio, Oklahoma City.

W. H. MILLER,

WHO has been appointed branch manager in St. Louis for the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., with headquarters at 4210 Forest Park boulevard The appointment is effective Jan. 1.

Miller has been with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. for a number of years and is well known here, as he joined Goodyear in 1910 in the credit department of the St. Louis branch. He later was made credit manager and then branch manager in Oklahoma City.

In 1927, he was made tire sales-manager of the Eastern division. His appointment as Southern division manager came at a later date and for a number of years he worked in and out of St. Louis, with this city as his headquarters.

V. M. DIRKES MADE NEW FISHER BODY CO. MANAGER IN ST. LOUIS

V. M. DIRKES,

WHOSE appointment as manager of the Fisher Body St. Louis division is announced by E. F. Fisher of the Fisher Body Detroit division of the General Motors Corporation. He succeeds J. G. Harris, who resigned because of illness. Dirkes has been with Fisher Body since 1921, and formerly was in the central office at Detroit.

Chrysler Airflow Car Prices Start at $1245; Six Priced $725 Up

Prices of the Chrysler line for 1934 are announced by J. E. Fields, president of the Chrysler Sales Corporation, as follows: Chrysler Airflow Imperial Eight, all body styles, $1495; Chrysler Airflow Eight, all body styles, $1245; Chrysler Six, business coupe, $725; rumble seat coupe, $775; brougham, $755; four-door sedan, $795; convertible coupe, $810.

"Our dealers everywhere say that they are being swamped with inquiries regarding the Airflow Chryslers," Fields said. The public seems to be thirsty for full information about the fundamental engineering back of our 1934 design.

"Most interest seems to attach to our assertion that the Airflow cars give an entirely new kind of ride—what we call the 'floating ride,' because the sensation is completely divorced from the conventional sensation of rolling. If we had the demonstrators available to take care of all those who seek a ride, we would almost crowd other traffic off the streets."

High Cost of Car Insurance.

Car insurance cost the American public $375,000,000 for 1933. The past year was distinguished by the increased number of damage suits brought in all parts of the country by persons injured as the result of the operation of automobiles. These cases have congested court calendars in unprecedented fashion. In Brooklyn alone there are so many automobile accident suits awaiting trial that it will take four years to clear the calendar at the rate litigation is proceeding without the addition of another case. There are more than 100,000 court cases in New York and metropolitan territory.

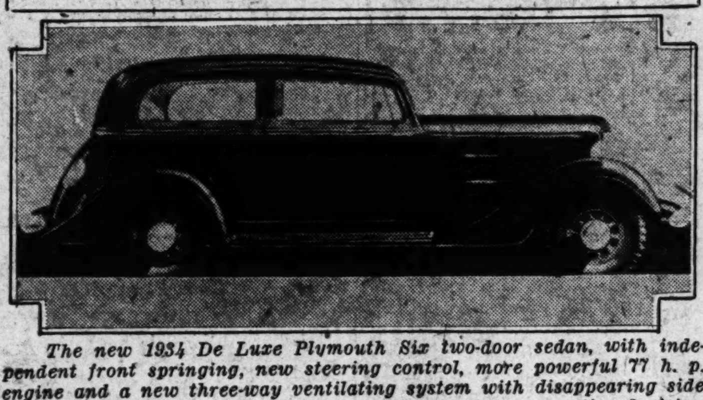
New De Luxe Plymouth



The new 1934 De Luxe Plymouth Six two-door sedan, with independent front springing, new steering control, more powerful 77 h. p. engine and a new three-way ventilating system with disappearing side window vents. The long windows are designed for exceptional vision range. The rear deck is smartly tailored in effect.

New Plymouth Cars For 1934 Displayed Here for First Time

Standard and De Luxe Models Have Independent Front Springing.

The new Plymouth line for 1934 is now on display here for the first time at all Dodge, De Soto and Chrysler dealers.

Introducing radical new improvements and smart new styling to the low price field, the new cars are the Plymouth six and the new De Luxe Plymouth. The de luxe model has all of the improvements of its lower priced companion car, plus other features.

The new Plymouths have even greater performance, remarkable riding comfort and innovation in cars in their price class.

They have a new type of individual front wheel springing with coil springs of a new alloy steel declared to be practically unbreakable under prolonged tests; new steering control; more powerful 77-horsepower motors with "floating power" engine mountings; smart new bodies of low, rakish design; new interiors with luxurious trim, and many other style and mechanical advantages.

The new Plymouth six and the new De Luxe Plymouth retain all of their basic Chrysler Motors engineering features, including hydraulic, self-equalizing brakes and new safety-steel bodies reinforced with steel.

The new Plymouth six comes in four body styles—the business coupe at $495; the two-door sedan at $535; the rumble seat coupe at $545 and the four-door sedan at $585. Wheelbase is 108 inches. Overall length is 180 inches.

The new De Luxe Plymouth Six is announced in five smart body styles—the business coupe at $575; the two-door sedan at $595; the rumble seat coupe at $615; the four-door sedan $650 and the convertible coupe at $660. Wheelbase is 114 inches. Overall length is 186 inches.

In announcing the new Plymouth line, B. E. Hutchinson, chairman of the board of the Plymouth Motor Corporation, said.

"The new Plymouths for 1934 are the highest achievement of Chrysler Motors engineers in the field of low priced motor cars. These new Plymouths have every mechanical advantage found in the past on our highest priced Chrysler cars.

There are more than 21 new features and improvements on the new Plymouth cars.

A bigger, 77-horsepower motor has many refinements and downdraft carburetion. An aluminum cylinder head is available as extra equipment on both models, increasing horsepower to 82.

Both the Plymouth Six and the de luxe model have a new type of "coil wind" windshield control—a small handle directly above the center of the instrument panel opens the windshield with a twist of the wrist. There is also a cowl ventilator. In addition, the de luxe Plymouth has a perfected ventilation system which is declared to be the "last word."

Ten-Reel 'Talkie' Tells Goodrich Story At St. Louis Meeting

Factory Executives Here for Two-Day Conference—"Electro-Pak" Battery Line Extended.

A 10-reel talking picture on the company's sales policy and the "Golden Ply Safety" Silvertown tire was a feature of a two-day conference held by executives of the B. F. Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co. in St. Louis the past week. There was also a stage presentation to supplement the movie.

The conference was one of a series being conducted in leading cities by executives from the company's headquarters at Akron, O., headed by S. B. Robertson, vice-president, and C. B. O'Connor, general sales manager.

Following its recent introduction of the new "Electro-Pak" storage battery for passenger cars, the Goodrich company announces extension of its line to include batteries for practically every size of truck, bus, fire truck, taxicab and tractor.

Plates in the new batteries are of special bus and truck design, heavier than those used for passenger car batteries. Separators are of the highest grade vertical grain Port Orford cedar, whose insulating strength is increased by perforated rubber sheets. This tends to retain the active material in the positive plates and prolong battery life.

Connectors are large, flexible lead-coated copper strips, which will carry the high discharges necessary in truck and bus operation, and because of flexibility do not break because of severe vibration to which the battery is subjected. Genuine hard rubber cases are used unless wood is desired.

Bus and truck T and H types carry a guarantee and adjustment policy for eight months, or 24,000 miles; passenger car super types in truck service, 12 months, or 24,000 miles, and passenger car standard and heavy-duty types in truck service, nine months, or 18,000 miles.

It is estimated that 25 per cent of the operators of automobiles in the United States are women.

Troop Notes

The January section of the roving camp savings club closes Saturday at Scout headquarters. Scouts intending to go on one of the four roving camps can save from $4 to $7 by joining the club. There are two trips to the East, one to the West and Yellowstone Park, and a Northern fishing trip.

The Wolf Patrol of Troop 166, St. Mark's English Lutheran Church, is now in first place in the troop's inter-patrol contest

Troop 164, Elias Michael School for Crippled Children, received its charter at its meeting last Tuesday from P. W. Schull, district commissioner. Dr. R. E. Travers, Scoutmaster, accepted for the troop.

Scouts of Troop 14, Alhambra Grotto, took an all-day outing last Saturday to Springlake, the camp of Troop 8.

Hal Rush, newly appointed field executive for the West District, was the speaker at a parents' night of Troop 90, Temple Shaare Emeth, last Wednesday.

Troop 30, which meets at the Y. M. H. A., will give a troop show on Feb. 17 to raise enough funds to pay for all the Scouts' registrations.

Fourteen Scouts of Troop 154, together with Scoutmaster Washbourne, held a three-day hike last week-end to Cliff Cave.

Four second-class Scouts received their pins and five merit badges were awarded at a court of honor held Thursday night by Troop 171, Notre Dame Deloures Church.

Thomas Quinlan, Richard Stretch and Robert Polito received their eagle badges at a court of honor held last Tuesday by Troop 122, Sherman Park Community Center.

A new troop, No. 261, has been organized by the Peter Herzog School Patrons' Association and will meet Friday nights at the school.

Automatic Pilots Will Be Installed On TWA Airliners

Safety and comfort of air passengers will be furthered as a result of the decision of Transcontinental & Western Air to equip its entire fleet of 41 twin-engine 200-mile-an-hour luxury airliners with Sperry automatic pilots. These airliners will soon go into service on its coast-to-coast lines.

"These mechanical pilots can do everything except think for the human pilots," TWA's president, Richard W. Robbins said. "They are designed to keep the plane flying smoothly on a level and straight course in any kind of weather. Tests show that they reduce much of the physical and mental strain on the pilot and co-pilot, enabling them to concentrate on the less fatiguing operations of maintaining radio contact with the ground, studying maps, getting up-to-the minute weather reports and other details which add to the comfort and safety of flying. The human pilot will continue to handle the plane when taking off and landing."

This is the same type of mechanical pilot which was used so effectively by Wiley Post on his round-the-world flight, and was approved by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, technical adviser of the airline.

W. W. HEAD SCOUT COUNCIL SPEAKER

President of National Body Will Be Heard Tomorrow Evening.

Walter W. Head, president of the national council of Boy Scouts, will be the chief speaker tomorrow night at the annual meeting of the St. Louis Council of Boy Scouts at 8 o'clock at Hotel Chase. Head, who is president of the General American Life Insurance Co., will speak on "Present Day Values."

The meeting will bring together most of the 2000 volunteer workers among the scouts—scoutmasters, field commissioners, and troop committeemen—with the members of the executive board and the professional workers. The dinner usually held with the annual meeting has been canceled for reasons of economy.

Three St. Louisans whose work among the scouts last year was outstanding will be presented with the Silver Beaver award and Head will be given his 15-year veteran's pin. Financial and executive reports for the year will be given by Lewis S. Haslam, treasurer, and Earle W. Beckman, executive.

Mayor Dickmann will be there to give the President's Achievement Awards to the scoutmasters and troop committeemen of the 85 troops that qualified for the 1933 streamers. These awards are part of the scout Ten-Year Program. Gale F. Johnston, vice-president of the council, will preside, and J. L. Johnson will announce the new members of the executive board.

The scouts themselves will be absent, except those who will furnish entertainment. The orchestra of Troop 236, Normandy Presbyterian Church, will play and the choir of Troop 98, St. Roch's Catholic Church, will sing. Accordion numbers will be played by the Zotto brothers.

Meanwhile work goes ahead for the scout mobilization on Saturday, Feb. 10, when most of the scouts in the city and county will gather at the Fox Theater to hear an address by President Roosevelt, which will be broadcast to all the scouts in the country.

The five districts will meet at five different points within six blocks of the theater and march in separate parades to their meeting. The scouts will have a rally of their own preceding the President's speech at which Mayor Dickmann and scout leaders will speak.

GYRO WINS, TATANNE UNPLACED IN THE "PONTCHARTRAIN"

St. Louis U. Wins Thrilling Game From Missouri, 30 to 26

Wray's COLUMN

Jimmy Burke Rests Up.

FOR the first time in more than 30 years Jimmy Burke, the only St. Louis boy to manage both St. Louis clubs, whose name still is almost a household word in local fandom, will be without a baseball job.

BURKE.

That is because of Jimmy's own choice, however. A short time ago he sent in his resignation to Joe McCarthy, manager of the Yanks, with whom he had been associated since the days when McCarthy managed the Louisville club of the American Association.

"My leg's a bit heavy," explained Jimmy, "and I can't get around well. I thought I'd rest up for a season to see if it would help."

McCarthy and Burke have been together in baseball for more than 20 years. McCarthy broke into the American Association with the Indianapolis club when Burke was its pilot. McCarthy managed the Louisville club at the same time that Burke piloted Toledo. When McCarthy went to the Cubs as manager, he took Burke with him as a coach. And when McCarthy went to New York to manage the Yankees, Jim went along. Burke proved a great help to McCarthy and probably will be missed next season.

Rosy-Faced James.

BURKE first appeared on a St. Louis roster for the Cardinals in 1903. He played third base and he was the pink-cheeked idol of all St. Louis fans.

Kid Nichols, once a great pitcher for Boston, had been made manager and he held the job for two years. In mid-year 1905 the Robisons released Nichols, and Burke was placed in charge of the club. He was succeeded the following year by John J. McCluskey.

Burke was called to manage the Browns in the latter part of 1918 and all of 1919-1920. He lifted his club into first division in 1920, but an argument with the management led to his retirement in favor of Lee Fohl. Previously he had served as coach and it was in this capacity that he later joined the Detroit and other clubs.

Burke, like Jack O'Connor, was one of the old "Goose Hill" district which graduated so many noted baseball players from St. Louis to the majors and big minor leagues.

On Your Toes, Pros.

IF YOU want to know what's wrong with professional boxing, go to the next amateur fight show. There you will see what ails the ancient pastime.

If the pros could inject the same earnestness and abandon into their endeavors that the amateurs displayed in the Post-Dispatch finals at the Arena Friday, boxers who earn their living by fighting would be supported by thousands instead of hundreds, today.

In the entire list of 22 events at the Arena, only one contest lagged. Every other bout had spectators pop-eyed. There was no clutching of gloves, no hugging in a death-like clinch, no tin-canning and no over-willingness to seek the sanctuary of the canvas when the milling became stormy.

It was one of the surprising things to veteran ring-siders, accustomed to seeing experienced men flinch from taking it, to observe these courageous youngsters struggle against the novice's inclination to yield to unaccustomed punishment.

If professional boxing wants to regain a place in the sun, it will have to meet the competition of the amateurs by showing at least as much spirit as the youngsters.

Score at end of half—St. Louis 12, Missouri 11.

By James M. Gould.

There may be more evenly-matched basketball teams than those of St. Louis and Missouri Universities but it would be rather hard to prove it in view of the two games played this season by the two schools. In December, the Tigers defeated the Billikens, 26 to 23; last night, before 1500 fans at the St. Louis U. gym, the Billikens reversed the decision and won by a score of 30 to 26 in a battle which was a thriller from start to finish. Thus, in two games, the score reads: St. Louis, 53; Missouri, 52—and you can't come much closer than that. Unfortunately, no third game is scheduled.

In winning their seventh victory in nine games, the Billikens had to fight all the way. They led at half-time, 12 to 11, and then saw the score tied at 16-16 after four minutes of play in the second half. The Tigers even went four points ahead after tying it up, but then the Billiken scoring machine began to function and, after a 22-22 deadlock, St. Louis took the lead and never thereafter were headed.

J. Cooper High Scorer.

The principal scorers for the Billikens were Bob Cochran and Charley Dirksen with 11 points apiece, but the high scorer for the evening turned up in J. Cooper, the Tiger forward, who compiled 12 points—nearly half the Missouri total. Arnold Arenz, the 1933 St. Louis U. football captain, inserted in the game in the second half, proved a tower of strength and his field goal, shot just as the final horn blew, made victory certain. He, with Flanigan, Dirksen and Fash, divided honors for the Billikens.

J. Cooper was a host in himself for the Tigers. Coach Edwards put two football heroes—Woodrow Hatfield and George Stuber—in the game in the final minutes but, though both gave good accounts of themselves, they couldn't turn the tide.

Three players went out of action because of four personal fouls—Flanigan for the Billikens and Captain Miller and Jorgenson, the starting guards, for Missouri.

Billikens Start Fast.

The Billikens started fast and ran up their score to 7—1 before the Tigers began to click. Miller, Jorgenson and J. Cooper contributed some nice shots so that at the end of the half the Billikens enjoyed only a 12—11 advantage.

Again, the Billikens started briskly when the second half began. Fash scored a field goal and Cochran, on a free throw, as the period began, but the Tigers were fighting hard and, though Captain Miller went out on four fouls with his team but one point behind, managed to tie the count at 16—16 with four minutes gone in the second period. Thompson here had a fine chance to put the Tigers ahead, but missed two free throws, but Jorgenson sank two free throws and J. Cooper a field shot from the side which put the Tigers in the lead. Dirkson, Arenz and Cochran then became perniciously active and, despite the uncanny accuracy of J. Cooper gave the Billikens an advantage the Tigers couldn't overcome.

The work of the two officials—Roy Newsom and "Red" Orr—was especially noteworthy. It was a hard game to handle, but the veteran officials worked a pretty game.

Next Saturday night St. Louis U.

Flyers Lose, 3 to 0, To Greyhounds, Play Tulsa Here Tonight

By W. J. McGoogan

Kansas City's Greyhounds took a commanding lead in the American Hockey Association standing by defeating the St. Louis Flyers, 3 to 0, at the Arena last night, in a game played on ice which was so thin in spots that the players' skates cut through to the concrete and in other places, pools of water stood on the surface.

The Greyhounds, as usual, when they get out in front, played a tight defensive game and when the Flyers in desperation threw caution to the winds in an attempt to score, Kansas City merely increased its total.

A penalty led to the first Kansas City score in the first period when with Joe Thorsteinson off the ice Healy counted on a pass from Mulvihill, then in the final period Mulvihill scored with Burland's assistance after 16 minutes and Ralph Taylor added another for good measure just before the period ended.

The victory gave Kansas City an eight-point advantage over the second-place Oklahoma City team and 10 points over the Flyers and Tulsa tied for second position.

Rollie Huard, Flyer center, suffered a possible fracture of the wrist when he fell on the ice in the first period. An X-ray examination will be made this morning to determine the extent of the injury but it is certain that he will not be able to play tonight against the Tulsa club.

William F. Grant, president of the league, arrived from Kansas City to view the contest, which was handled by two referees—McKinnon and Seaborn, the first time two referees have been on the job here this season.

The Tulsa club also got into St. Louis in time for a group of the players to see the contest, but Bob Hughes was not among those present. However, Vic Des Jardines, coach of the Oilers, said that he would use Hughes in tonight's game, although he might not start the contest.

A crowd announced by the Hockey Club as numbering 7295 persons attended.

Dundee dropped Soltis with a right to the chin late in the second round and the referee stopped the fight when Soltis, groggy and dazed, could not defend himself. The round lasted 2:29. Dundee weighed 157 pounds; Soltis 159½.

BABE RUTH IS UNDER TREATMENT FOR COLD

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Babe Ruth was under treatment today for a severe cold contracted several days ago after the former home run king had been golfing over a Westchester course.

The attending physician, Dr. Oswald Larotonda, said Ruth was running a high temperature when he was called in for the first time yesterday, but that he was "doing nicely" now and probably would be fully recovered within a week.

Mrs. Ruth said the Babe's fever had subsided somewhat and that he seemed much improved.

Ruth, who already has signed his 1934 contract with the New York Yankees, calling for $35,000, plans an early departure for St. Petersburg, Fla., where the team will train.

Post-Dispatch Boxing School Winners Train Eyes on A. A. U. Meets

So successful was the first novice boxing tournament held at The Arena Friday night under the auspices of the Post-Dispatch and the City Department of Recreation, that it was decided yesterday that there would be another event of the same kind next winter.

Mayor Dickmann said that while no thought had been given to another tournament, he considered it such a splendid thing, both for spectators and the boys competing, that the people would be glad to see another at any time.

"I saw more fighting at the Post-Dispatch's show than I've seen in 10 years," declared one enthusiast of the dozens who called the Post-Dispatch yesterday to express their satisfaction. "Those amateurs certainly could teach the professionals something about willingness."

"100 Per Cent Satisfactory."

Mayor Dickmann declared that the show was not only exciting, but was one of the best sports exhibitions he had ever attended, both as to interest and management.

Dr. Robert Hyland, who attends almost every sporting event of consequence, 'phoned his congratulations and expressed the hope that it be made an annual event. "The amateurs gave a splendid display and showed amazing skill and courage," he said. "It was a 100 per cent satisfactory show."

Among those who expressed satisfaction and pleasure were Seneca Taylor, St. Louis member of the State Boxing Commission; Circuit Judge Robert Hall, Vice-President L. C. McEvoy of the Browns, Willis Johnson, traveling secretary of the Browns; Al Neist, veteran boxing official, Walter Heisner, Bob Parkinson, Jim Solari and many others.

Some to Enter A. A. U. Meet.

The eight champions were so thrilled with their success that after second thought some of them have about decided to go ahead and try their luck in future amateur tournaments, particularly the Western A. A. U. championships, which are to be held March 16, and the National Senior A. A. U. tournament, whihc is to be held at the Arena April 4, 5 and 6.

Frank Tombridge, the big Cleveland High School boy, who won the heavyweight championship, said that he certainly hoped to continue with boxing. So did Wesley Leverich, light-heavyweight title-holder; George Van Ronzelen, welter-

Oklahoma Keeps Its Record Clear, Beats Nebraska

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 27.—Oklahoma kept its Big Six Conference basketball record unblemished here tonight with a 44 to 36 victory over Nebraska's Cornhuskers.

The Nebraskans started off with a rush to take a 6 to 0 lead and after Oklahoma had gained an 18 to 13 margin at half time, the Cornhuskers returned to forge ahead twice before the Sooners uncorked their big scoring spree.

Bross, smallest man on the floor, led the Oklahomans' basket barrage with nine field goals for 18 points and Lunney, Nebraska forward, was next high scorer with seven field goals and a gift toss. The game saw 24 fouls called but neither team could connect from the free throw line satisfactorily.

JIM DANDY, PACEMAKER, DEFEATED BY HALF LENGTH

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 27.—In an upset that set all of the 5000 spectators gasping, Mrs. Joe Zoeller's highly regarded Kentucky Derby hopeful, Tatanne, finished out of the money in the Pontchartrain handicap, which brought out a field of six starters at the Fair Grounds course here this afternoon.

The daughter of St. James, winner of her last six starts which she topped by taking the Jefferson Derby last Saturday, appeared in the running only once and that in the second position at the quarter Right after that she faded completely and finished in the ruck. She was heavily supported and became a prohibitory choice.

The contest was won by Mose Goldblatt's Gyro, a half length in front of J. B. McKee's veteran Jim Dandy, and the show was captured by John J. O'Byrne's Chrysostom.

Jim Dandy set the early pace and went into the stretch a half length in the lead with Gyro running second and Chrysostom third. In the dash to the wire Gyro blazed past Jim Dandy to score by his half-length margin. Chrysostom had no difficulty hanging on to the show end of the prize.

Jockey Jacobs had the mount on the winner and brought him over the mile and a sixteenth of a muddy track in 1:50 2-5 for a $15.20 payoff. Jackie Westrope rode Jim Dandy and Arcaro had the leg up on Chrysostom.

Today's defeat puts a damper on Tatanne's possibilities in the Derby. Her performance was a miserable one and was in sharp contrast to her sparkling victory in the Jefferson Derby last week in which she carried 121 pounds, seven less than today, over the same distance and over a similar track. Today she met older campaigners but she seemed capable of beating them. The severest disappointment of all was that she finished out of the money. So complete a defeat was not expected.

Eligibility Rules

Each team must abide by its league rules and any violation of said rules will suspend the offending team from future play.

If you wish to enter a team that does not belong to an organized league you may enter provided your eligibility is approved by the tournament committee. Players of your team must be members in good standing of the church since January 1, 1934. A team roster must accompany all entry blanks, and must be certified by the pastor of the church.

Including as eligibles every organized church basketball team in the city and St. Louis County, the Post-Dispatch will sponsor the Greater St. Louis Church Basketball tournament with play beginning, Monday, Feb. 12 and extending for the 10 or 12 days necessary to the completion of the event. Play will be in three divisions—Boys' Senior, Girls' Senior and Boys' Intermediate and it is expected that from 90 to 120 teams will compete.

Preliminary games will be played in church gymnasiums in every section of the city and county so that all communities will have their games with the semi-finals and finals to be played either at St. Louis U. gym or Washington Field House, February 20 and 22, respectively. Primarily, the tournament is for "organized" church teams—that is, teams belonging to regular church leagues, but independent church teams which can prove the eligibility of their players also may compete. This eligibility will be passed upon by the Tournament Committee.

Entry Information.

Entries, blanks for which will be supplied on application, should be made to Roy Newsom, tournament chairman, care of the Sports Department, St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Entries for the three classes will close February 7. All information desired may be obtained from Chairman Newsom by telephoning him at CEntral 6400 or HIland 3584.

The development of sportsmanship and of the game of basketball is the sole goal of the tournament. Eligibility rules are of the simplest. Each team must abide by their league rules and any violation thereof will cause the suspension of the team from tournament play. Members of the teams—organized or independent—must be members in good standing of the church they are representing, as of January 1, 1934, and a team roster, certified by the pastor, must accompany all entry blanks.

Those are all the requirements for entry. There is no entry fee nor will there be any admission charges either to preliminary or semifinal or final games.

Never before, in the history of church sport, has there been such a comprehensive tournament and the winners of the three classes will be thoroughly entitled to their championships. To simplify the rules, all games will be played under the boys' rules. Referees and other tournament officials will be named by the Tournament Committee without cost either to church or player.

Church Players Eligible.

Basketball has made great strides forward in recent years and, because of the few equipment requirements, has surged to the front as the sport for church teams. Every church in every parish of every denomination is eligible. There are absolutely no restrictions except that teams shall be native to the city or county.

Entry blanks will be printed daily in the sport section of the Post-Dispatch.

Also, a supply of blanks together with "Eligible Players' Lists" have been printed and will be supplied without cost by application to Chairman Newsom, care of the Sport Department.

It is proposed to make this Church Basketball Tournament an annual affair. No entry can be made too early; delay may cause entries to be refused if received after closing date, so the safest course to pursue is to enter at once.

Remember every church team, whether in an organized league or not, is eligible. The eligibility of players must be certified to by the pastors of the various churches. That is the only restriction.

Suitable championship awards will be given winners in the different classes at the conclusion of play.

It costs nothing to enter. It will cost spectators nothing to see the games. Games will be played, in preliminary rounds, in every section of the city and county.

MACKENZIE AND PARTNER LOW IN COAST GOLF MEET WITH 64

By the Associated Press.

RIVERSIDE, Cal., Jan. 27.—Back in the form which made him one of the nation's leading amateurs several years ago, Roland Mackenzie, Washington, D. C., pro, teamed with Ed Babcock of Los Angeles, to win the second qualifying round of the Riverside amateur-pro golf tournament today with a score of 32-32—64.

The winning team's card was eight strokes under par for the treacherous course. It gave the Congressional Club professional $200 in prize money. His individual count was 36-34—70, two strokes under.

Two strokes back and tied for second place were a team of two amateurs, Gail Stockton and Don Knapp of San Bernardino, and Dick Metz, Deal, N. J., assistant professional, and Jack Dunphy, Los Angeles amateur. They had scores of 66.

Since neither Stockton, former Pacific Coast intercollegiate champion from the University of Southern California, nor Knapp, was willing to turn professional for the money involved in the tie for second place, undisputed second position cash went to Metz, giving him $125.

Bill Schwartz of St. Louis and R. Kolle, Long Beach, put together 34 and 35 for a 69. Another Missourian, Harold McSpaden of Kansas City, with Newell Parker of Riverside as his partner, had 33-34—67.

Ralph Guldahl, former pro at St. Louis Country Club, played with Billy Can of Los Angeles, the pair turning in a 69.

Competition was considerably keener today than in yesterday's qualifying round when two teams, Jim Fogertey of St. Louis and Paul Garzee of Riverside, and Byron Nelson of Texarkana, Tex., and Art Sato of San Francisco, tied for first place with 65's.

Par equalling rounds of 72 today were necessary to qualify for tomorrow's final play, whereas 76's allowed yesterday's leaders to enter the finals.

A hole in one featured today's play, Leonard Defani, a State Senator from Riverside County playing to an 11 handicap with Jack Street, local professional, drove the green on the 178-yard thirteenth and the ball trickled into the cup. The team finished in a tie with 10 others for eleventh place with 69.

Approximately 80 teams will compete in the 18-hole final tomorrow. The winning pro will receive $300.

Guinea Kop, Honolulu, and Curtis Lyons, Los Angeles, 35-32—67.
Ralph Guldahl, Chicago, and Billy Can, Los Angeles, 35-34—69.
Bill Mehlhorn, Brooklyn, and Jim Ross, Santa Monica, 33-37—70.
Willie Hunter and Harold Dmitrick, Culver City, 35-35—70.

EDDIE SHORE REJOINS BRUINS IN HOCKEY CONTEST TONIGHT

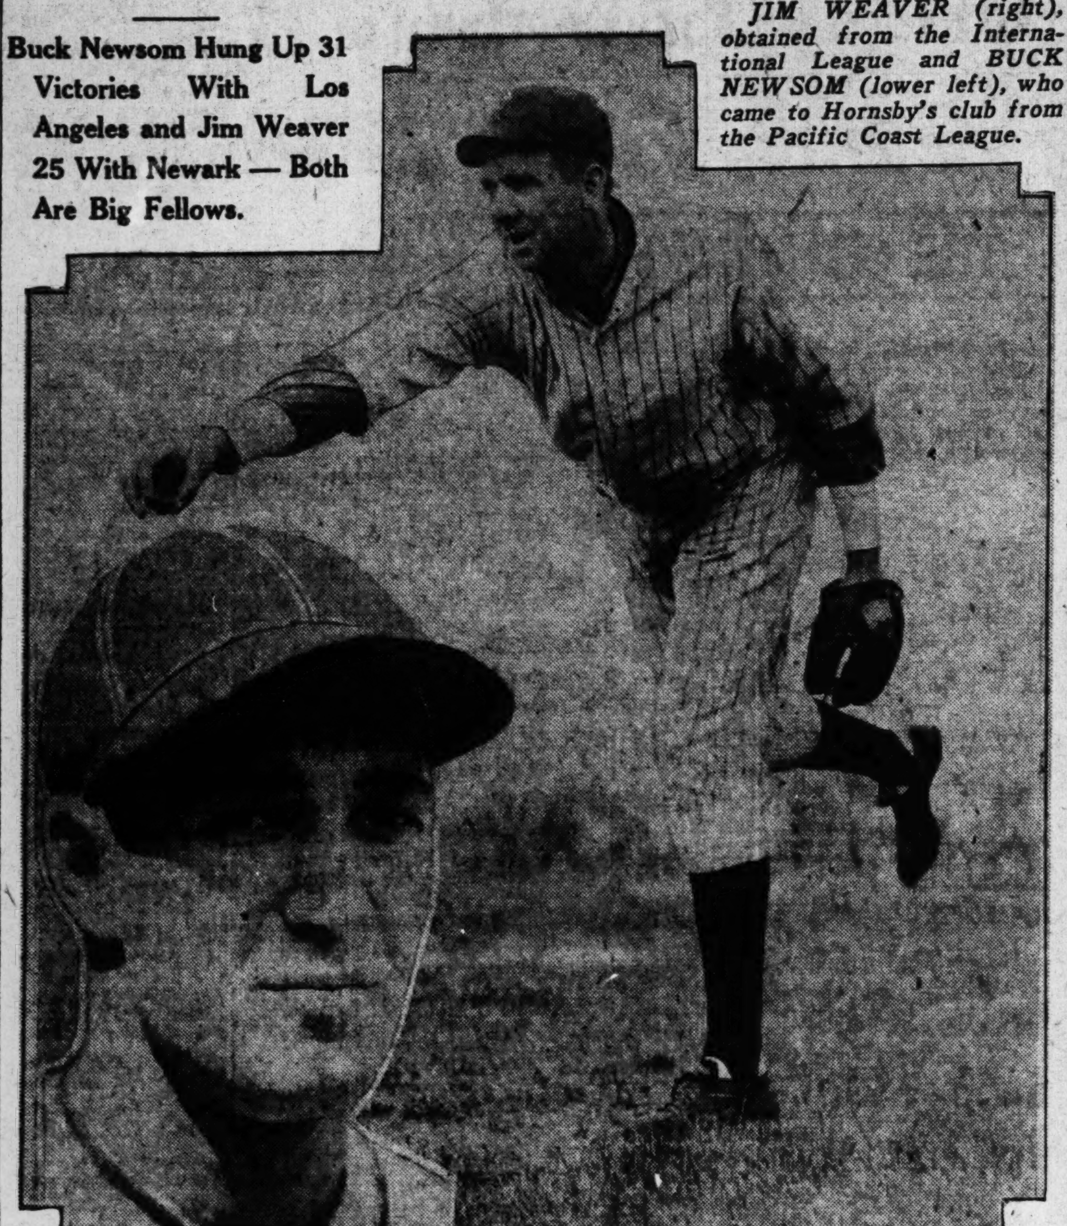
Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Eddie Shore will return to the ice with the Boston Bruins tomorrow night for the first time since the famous Ace Bailey incident of Dec. 12.

He has waited almost six weeks for his suspension, growing out of the Bailey case, to be lifted. The break will come with the match here between the New York Rangers and Boston.

Two of Hornsby's New Hurlers Won More Games in 1933 Than the Browns

Buck Newsom Hung Up 31 Victories With Los Angeles and Jim Weaver 25 With Newark — Both Are Big Fellows.



JIM WEAVER (right), obtained from the International League and BUCK NEWSOM (lower left), who came to Hornsby's club from the Pacific Coast League.

By Herman Wecke.

Two minor league pitchers of 1933 who will receive tryouts with the Browns at West Palm Beach, Fla., next spring, last season won more games than the Browns did in finishing eighth in the American League pennant race.

The hurlers are Buck Newsom and Jim Weaver. Pitching in two of the fastest minor leagues in the country, the Pacific Coast and International, the two twirlers put together 56 victories, whereas the Browns, as a club, won but 55 in the American League.

Of course, pitching in the American and the minors is a different matter, but if the two men can approximate their 1933 records, it appears that Rogers Hornsby has picked up two likely prospects.

However, there are two others, who have had good minor league records. They are Jim Walkup and Garland Braxton.

Combined with the records of Newsom and Weaver, these four newcomers won 87 games and lost 40 for a winning percentage of .661. This mark stands out when compared to that of the 1933 Browns, which showed but 55 victories and 96 defeats, a .364 percentage. The four newcomers gained 32 more victories than did Hornsby's entire 1933 staff.

Newsom is the bright star of the quartet. Pitching for the Los Angeles club, he put together 31 victories against but 11 defeats. The former Coast Leaguer has been up before, having had a brief tryout with the Cubs, when Rogers Hornsby was manager of the Bruins. So Hornsby knows something about the pitcher. One thing certain, the Browns' recruit was no shirker of work, since he pitched in 325 innings, the equivalent of 36 complete games. He struck out 219 batters and walked 122.

Weaver, brought up from the Yankees' farm at Newark, was another hard worker. He pitched 268 innings, almost 30 complete contests, while putting together 25 victories and losing 11 games. He fanned 174 and walked 92 batters. Weaver's total of 174 strikeouts paced the International League.

Both Newsom and Weaver are big fellows. Newsom stands 6 feet 2½ inches and weighs 195 pounds, while Weaver is 6 feet 6½ inches tall and tips the beam at 230 pounds when in condition.

SRENCO WINS HIS THIRD DISTRICT HANDBALL TITLE

Jack Srenco won the Y. M. C. A. handball singles championship yesterday afternoon, defeating Frank Zander in the final match, 21—2, 21—16, at the Downtown "Y." Srenco and Zander have been prominent handball players in the last few years, and this was Srenco's third victory in a major tourney, Zander having two titles to his credit.

Srenco took the first game easily, counting 12 of his points in the sixth of seven innings. The second game went 14 innings.

In the doubles final Zander paired with Marshall Lehr to win over Mike Cunningham and Earl Srenco, 21—16, 7—21, 21—15. The class B title went to Steve Koptis, who turned back John Stumhofer, 21—17, 21—12.

Winners in this tournament became eligible to enter the national Y. M. C. A. handball championships at Washington, D. C., Feb. 21 to 24.

A cup donated by Mayor Dickmann will be given to Srenco; the doubles winners will receive an award from Judge Finegan, and Koptis will be given a cup by the "Y" committee.

Ferguson Basket Tourney Will Be Held This Week

Ferguson High School's second annual invitational basketball tournament will be held Jan. 31, Feb. 2 and 3, with the eight schools from the County Division of the St. Louis County League participating.

These schools are: Hancock, Bayless, Riverview Gardens, Fairview, Eureka, Jennings, Brentwood and Ferguson. Brentwood is leading the league with eight victories and no defeats and will be the favorite to win the tournament.

Jennings and Ferguson are expected to give Brentwood its hardest competition, but as Brentwood has already defeated these teams it is probable that it will again win over them in the tournament.

weight; Al Bridges, featherweight, and Ray Zarazza, flyweight.

Jack Boshard, who captured the bantamweight crown and also the trophy offered the outstanding boxer in the tournament, was undecided.

Jack, a clerk at the International Shoe Co., said he entered the boxing school and the tournament largely because he felt that he needed exercise. He plays tennis in the summer time but that is about the only sport in which he had engaged prior to the school.

The boy, 20 years of age, has been in St. Louis for four years, coming from his home in Provo, Utah, where Jack Dempsey once resided and, incidentally shined shoes in the barber shop operated by Boshard's father.

Dempsey was very much the topic of conversation in Boshard's home when Jack was a little lad but he does not feel that hero worship of Dempsey or even the fact that he had met the former heavyweight champion moved him to join Benny Kessler's class.

"No, it was only the need for exercise," he said, "but after I started, I thought the best thing to do was to do it right."

Cracked a Rib in Training.

During the training sessions at Sherman Park, where Boshard conditioned, Jack devoted his time strictly to the task in hand. When other boys were sitting around taking it easy, he was jumping rope or shadow boxing.

The only chance he had to do road work, really the most important part of a boxer's training, was early in the morning and on Saturdays and Sundays. Jack got up at 5:30 a. m. and lit out from his home, 5060 Cates avenue, for Forest Park. A run in the park and return and Jack had accomplished 2½ to 3 miles on the road.

One of these jaunts resulted rather seriously for him, however, for just before Christmas he stumbled and fell in Forest Park and cracked a rib. He had to refrain from all training for some little time until the injury healed, then returned with redoubled energy to his boxing, with the result that he went on to win the championship of his class and the special trophy.

None of the title winners suffered more than superficial contusions and abrasions. Leverich was sporting a vari-colored "shiner," while Gordon Ryan's face was skinned a bit, but that was about all the damage that was done.

All of the boys expressed their satisfaction with the school, with Kessler's teaching.

Miss Miley a Champion.

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 27.— Marion Miley of Lexington, Ky., today won the Riviera women's golf championship, but she had to take Jean Bauer of Providence, R. I., over 53 holes for a 2 and 1 victory to do it. They finished yesterday's championship round of 36 holes all even, and went into an additional 18 holes today.

SCHROEDER WINS TWO RACES IN SKATING MEET

By the Associated Press.

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., Jan. 27.—After several years' possession by Canada the North American speed skating championships appeared to be headed back toward the United States today.

Yankee bladesmen stood at the top of point listings in all four divisions at the close of the first day's competition in the international classic on Fowler Lake here.

Stocky Eddie Schroeder of Chicago, world's record holder for 10,000 and 3000 meters, led the men's division, taking two firsts and a second to score 80 points today.

In the women's section, Kit Klein of Buffalo, holder of the United States one mile and 1500 meter records, gathered 30 points to tie Dorothy Franey of St. Paul, national champion for 1934.

Taking first in the mile and two mile, and second in the 880 yard race for men, Schroeder amassed his 80 points with an impressive show of power. His closest contender was Jimmy Webster of St. Paul, who collected 50 points by taking first in the half mile and second in the 330 yard dash.

Miss Franey counted her 30 points on a first in the 220 yard and Miss Klein took hers by winning over the three-quarter mile distance.

Had Miss Franey not turned her head to see how she was doing in the three quarter mile race she might have led her division. As she approached the finish line the national champion checked her stride by looking back. Miss Klein sped by and a second later Miss Franey, pressing her strokes to make up her loss, spilled and failed to place.

Mrs. Leila Brooks Potter, Toronto, holder of the only North American title being defended in this year's meet, failed to place in any of the women's events today.

Final events will be skated tomorrow.

Miss Laskowitz Third in 220-Yard Race.

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., Jan. 27.—Miss Elsie Laskowitz, was the only St. Louis skater to break into the point column in the North American skating championships at Fowler Lake here this afternoon. Miss Laskowitz placed third in the senior women's 220-yard dash behind Mrs. Dorothy Franey of St. Paul, the national champion, and Rose Marie Brady of Detroit who was second.

Although she looked strong in the sprint event Miss Laskowitz failed to qualify in the three-quarter mile race, the only other women's event held today.

The other St. Louis skaters, while they did not place in any finals, gave good accounts of themselves in preliminary races. Mel Dubinsky, the St. Louis University flyer, captured the first heat in the 220, but did not survive the fast pace in the semifinals. Truman Connell, youthful star, also placed in a heat in the 220, but likewise was shut out later on.

Connell, Lamar Ottsen and John Bretz all qualified in the half mile but were unable to place in the semis.

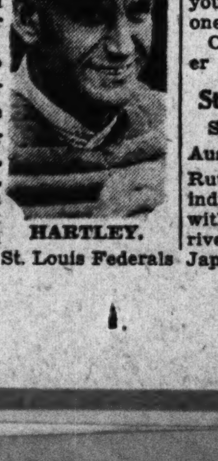
Browns Sign Grover Hartley As a Coach for Next Season

Grover Allen Hartley, who served part of his 23 years as a catcher with the St. Louis Federals and the Browns, has been signed as coach for the St. Louis American League club, Manager Rogers Hornsby announced last night.

"We had scores of applications," Hornsby said, "and Hartley was our choice. He was with the Browns years ago, which influenced our decision, and he is a hard worker, a smart baseball man and 100 per cent loyal."



HARTLEY.

Hartley, who served last year as coach for the Pirates, under George Gibson, was born July 2, 1888. He was with the New York Giants in 1912 and 1913 and with the St. Louis Federals in 1915 and moved to the Browns when the late Phil Ball bought the club from Robert Lee Hedges.

Subsequently Hartley moved around considerably before shifting to the minor leagues. He was with the Columbus club of the American Association in 1920 and 1921 and both years was named the most valuable man on the team. When McGraw needed a catcher, he bought the veteran Hartley from Columbus to help out in an emergency.

At Pittsburgh Hartley coached young pitchers, and that will be one of his jobs with the Browns.

Charley O'Leary is Hornsby's other coach.

Still Want to See Babe Ruth.

SYDNEY, Australia, Jan. 27.—Australia still wants to see Babe Ruth. Strong efforts were made to induce the player to visit Australia with the baseball teams due to arrive at Brisbane after visiting Japan and Manila.

Horse Sense.

"ALAS!" said the horse, "This is what I call tough,
Those knee-action autos are stealing my stuff;
It wouldn't surprise me if speeders some day
When feeling their oats should step on the hay.

"I hate those machines with their glistening coats,
Right out of my mouth they have taken the oats.
But while they revile me and give me the pitch
I've got too much horse-sense to go into the ditch."

NEW BEDFORD BEATS QUINCY IN CUP GAME

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Jan. 27.—The New Bedford Tessiers swamped the Quincy Canadian soccer eleven, 8 to 2, at Coats Field here today in a national challenge cup soccer game. They will meet the Fairlawn Rovers in the second round next week.

Amaral and Hanson scored for the winners to give them a two-goal lead at half time. In the second half the ultimate winners ran the Quincy eleven off their feet and Swistak and Simmons scored within 10 minutes of the restart to make it 4 to 0 for Tessiers. After Swistak scored the fifth goal for his team, Quincy took a spurt and Craig and McManus tallied to make the score 5 to 2. The New Bedford eleven came back strong and goals by Hanson, Amaral and Swistak brought the final score to 8 to 2.

MINNESOTA DEFEATS NORTHWESTERN, 31-30

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 27.—Northwestern's Wildcats lost their third Big Ten basketball game tonight, 31 to 30, when Minnesota capitalized on a big early lead.

The Wildcats, who were pursuing Purdue and Iowa for the conference leadership, were surprised by a first half Minnesota basket shooting barrage which sent the Gophers ahead 18 to 10, at the half. Northwestern rallied then to make it a close melee the rest of the way.

BASEBALL STAR OF NAVY DRAWS RELEASE TO PLAY FOR THE BROWNS

By J. Roy Stockton

Howard Robinson Mills, a left-handed pitcher generally regarded as the greatest baseball player in the U. S. Navy, has been given his discharge from the service so that he may try to make the grade as a thrower of curves for Rogers Hornsby's Browns.

Mills' record with the U. S. S. Lexington nine attracted the attention of numerous major league scouts and for a time it appeared that Judge Bramham, the Commissioner Landis of the minor leagues, might have to act as referee in the scramble for his services. But when it was learned that Mills had agreed to terms with L. C. McEvoy of the Browns, more than a year ago, contingent on his obtaining his release from the Navy, the other clubs withdrew their claims.

"Mills, of course, will be signed to a minor league contract," McEvoy told the Post-Dispatch yesterday. "But reports of his ability are so glowing that we expect him to make the grade in the American Association and he looks like such a good prospect that Hornsby will take him to training camp at West Palm Beach."

McEvoy produced clippings from Coast League newspapers and the Navy Sports News, a service publication, to show how Mills rated with Pacific Coast observers.

During his years with the U. S. Lexington nine, Mills pitched several no-hit games.

According to Lt. J. E. Jones, U. S. N. Retired, described in the Navy Sports News as "having seen them all," Mills is the greatest baseball player ever developed in the Navy. While he was pitching his no-hit games he struck out 23 batters in one contest and in three fleet games fanned a total of 48.

Mills is 22 years old, an inch over 6 feet tall and weighs 190 pounds. He recently won the Navy popularity prize in a contest conducted by the service publication. He is an expert machinist and had considerable trouble obtaining his discharge because of his high rating and value to the service.

The U. S. S. Lexington has been stationed at San Pedro, Cal., so Mills has not been kept off baseball diamonds by being in the Navy.

Miss Virginia Pep Seeks to Play as Amateur Again

Mrs. Ignatius S. Hynes was elected president of the St. Louis Women's District Golf Association at the annual meeting of that organization held recently, and Westwood Country Club was chosen as the scene of the annual women's tournament which likely will be held about the middle of June.

Miss Virginia Pep, former district champion, who turned professional some time ago, applied for reinstatement as an amateur and was referred to the United States Golf Association, which probably will impose the usual restriction that Miss Pep refrain from professional activities for a period of time before she may be restored to amateur standing.

Other officers elected were Mrs. Clarence Robbins, Normandie, vice-president; Mrs. Alfred Vorhaus, Westwood, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. F. Ernst, Osage, recording secretary; Mrs. Holbrook T. Ashton, Sunset, treasurer; Mrs. Samuel F. L. Snyder, Westborough, sports chairman.

It was decided to seek the women's Western tournament for 1935.

Ben Lahrman, president of the St. Louis District Association, announced yesterday that the annual meeting would be held within the next two weeks, at which time officers will be elected and courses chosen for the various tournaments this season.

Walter Pfeffer, president of Westborough Country Club, expects to make announcement during the coming week of the plans for rebuilding Westborough's clubhouse, recently destroyed by fire, and other plans for the coming season.

VENZKE,

DICK BELL OF M. I. T., LEFT ON MARK, FINISHES THIRD IN DASH

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—Against the fastest field to toe the mark this season, Gene Venzke, Pennsylvania's indoor mile record-holder, reeled off a 4:20 mile, jogging the last lap, to gain his third consecutive victory in the K. of C. mile, the feature event of the 13th annual Prout Memorial Games at the Boston Garden.

The smooth-running sophomore, starting his final drive when an official pulled the bell with two laps to go, beat out Joe Mangan of Cornell by a good 50 yards. Glen Dawson of Tulsa, Ok., the National A. A. U. 1000-yard titlist, straggled home in third place and Frank Crowley of Manhattan, the I. C. R. A.'s indoor mile champion, was fourth in the field of 10 starters.

Venzke, making his first start of the season, was in perfect condition for a heroic performance. But for the miscounting of the laps, he would probably have finished under 4:15, his 1913 time for this race.

He had 30 yards on Mangan when they gave him the bell and another turn about the track increased his lead to 50 yards over the Ithacan star. Officials quickly corrected the lap checker and the tape was not put up.

Gathering speed with every mighty stride, Venzke tore up to the finish line and, when he failed to find a tape to break, was so upset that he slowed down, almost to a walk. Mangan and the rest of the competitors, seeing the jogging leader, also thought the race was ended and they slowed down and followed him for another lap without changing positions.

Venzke's times at the quarters were 61 3-5, 2:11 2-5 and 3:15 1-5, 4:20. This world record holder jumped out front at the start and set the pace until Frank Nordell of N. Y. U. forged to the front during the fourth lap. Venzke answered this challenge with a tremendous "lift" that carried him past the Purple runner in a few strides.

Mangan, content with a halfway position, did not start going up until after the third quarter and no one but Venzke was able to shake him off when he spurted.

Phil Cohen of the Millrose A. A., New York, out-raced Walter Janiak, Holy Cross Freshman flier, by inches to capture the 50-yard dash final. Dick Bell, of St. Louis, M. I.T.'s lanky indoor intercollegiate champion at 70 yards, was left on the mark, but managed to place third with a terrific burst of speed. Cohen's time was 5 4-5 seconds.

45-YARD HIGH HURDLES—Won by R. E. McLaughlin, Boston A. A.; Richard Hayes, Harvard, second; Neil Holland, Boston College, third. Time—6sec.

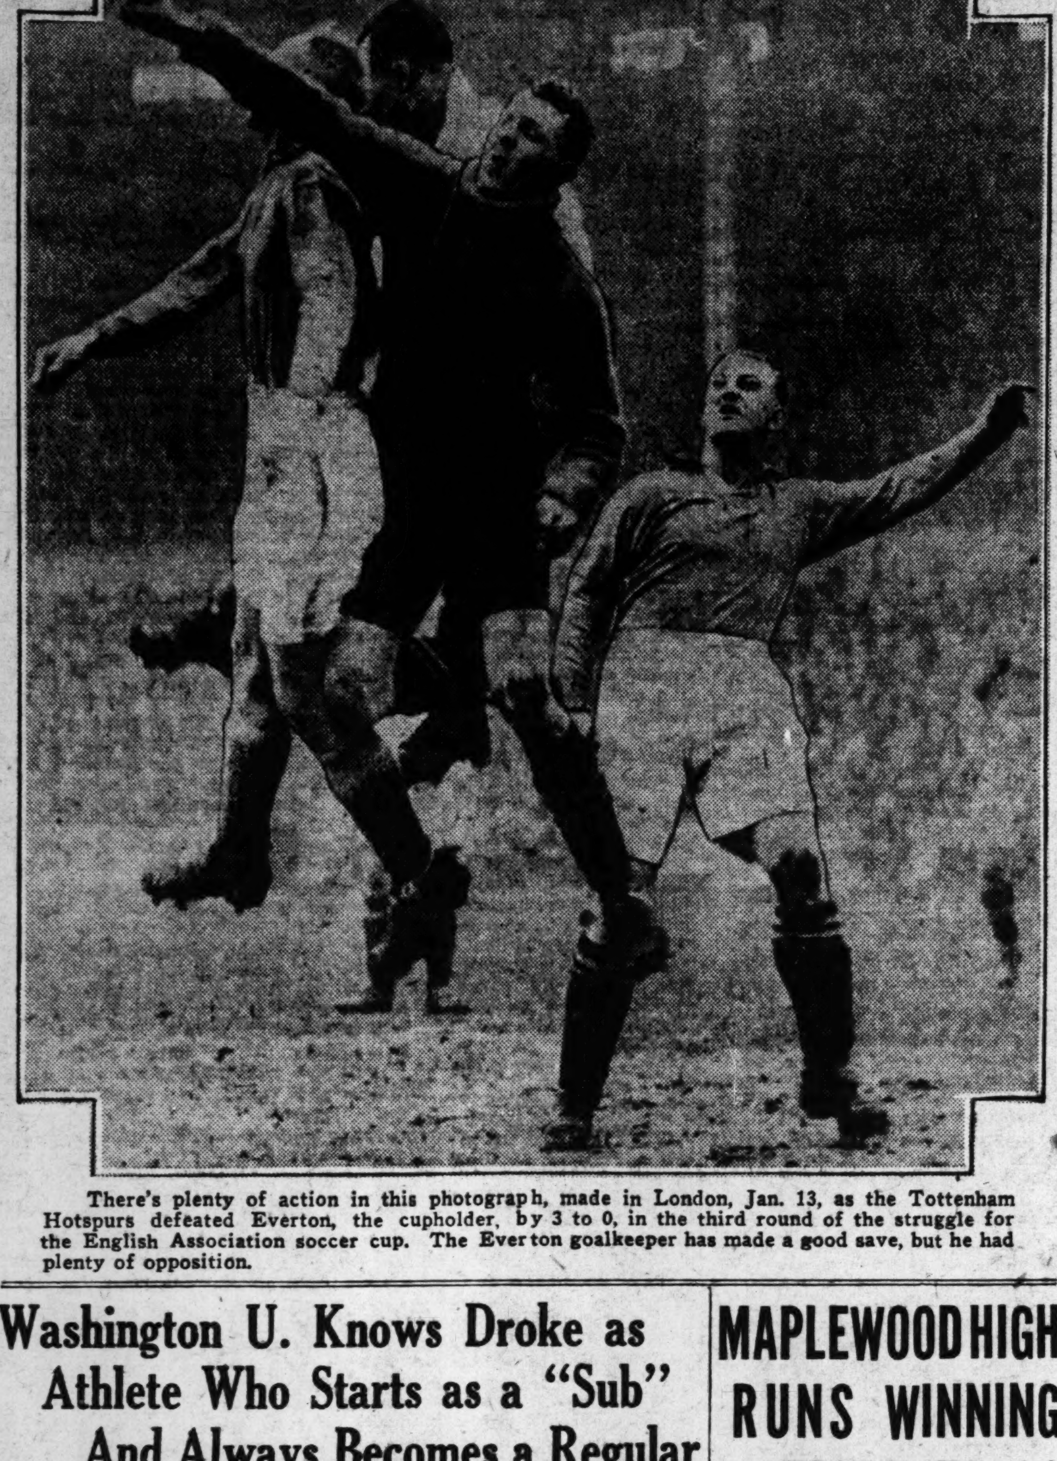
Six Feet Off the Ground!

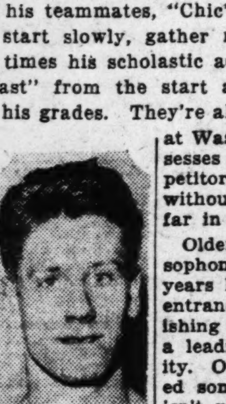


There's plenty of action in this photograph, made in London, Jan. 13, as the Tottenham Hotspurs defeated Everton, the cupholder, by 3 to 0, in the third round of the struggle for the English Association soccer cup. The Everton goalkeeper has made a good save, but he had plenty of opposition.

Washington U. Knows Droke as Athlete Who Starts as a "Sub" And Always Becomes a Regular

By James M. Gould.

To the coaches at Washington University, he is known as the player who, in any sport he tackles, starts as a substitute and ends as a regular and a star regular, too. On the university rolls, he is Charles Droke; to his teammates, "Chic" will do. But, if in sport, Droke appears to start slowly, gather momentum and finish in a burst of speed, he times his scholastic activities differently. In the classroom, he's "fast" from the start and his athletic instructors never even look at his grades. They're always high.



DROKE.

Droke, now 22 years old, hasn't had the easiest time getting an education, either. He had to drop out of Beaumont High School—he also starred in athletics there—for two years to earn money to complete the high school course. Then, at Washington, he had to find work to enable him to complete his education.

Became a Regular.

"Chick" is a halfback in football. At the beginning of the 1933 season, he was regarded as a fairly useful reserve. That is, he was so regarded until circumstances gave him a chance in a game. Right there he ceased being a reservist and became a regular. In the big games he was Washington's most consistent ground gainer and Jimmy Conzelman isn't worrying about one halfback berth on the 1934 eleven.

Because of his various jobs at school, Droke was unable to find time to come out for freshman basketball so, when he appeared for a varsity trial late last fall, he followed his usual custom and began by riding the bench. But the time came when he was sent in as guard. That chance was all he needed. He's a regular starter now.

There's no more popular student at Washington. He's quiet but possesses in a high degree that "competitors' heart" and the will to win without which no athlete gets very far in the sport world.

Older than the general run of sophomores because of the two years he had to work between his entrance at Yeatman and his finishing up at Beaumont, Droke takes a leading part in all college activity. Of course, these are interrupted somewhat because when Chick isn't practicing football or basketball, he is a life guard at Wilson Pool or, in the evenings, may be found washing dishes in one of the fraternity houses.

"You've got to get out and work a while to appreciate the value of an education," Droke says. "I had to leave high school after my second year because I hadn't the money to continue and, believe me, I found out one thing—you have to know something to get anywhere in this world 'cause there's a lot of competition."

Fine Athletic Record.

Droke was president of the Boys' Athletic Association at Beaumont and made the all-star team both in football and basketball. He also played baseball in a church league and is an excellent swimmer. His favorite is football, however.

Droke is an orphan. His mother died when Chick was 10 and his father when the boy was 17. A student in the School of Commerce and Finance, he is a member of the T. K. E. fraternity.

Christy Flanagan Is Appointed Duquesne U. Athletic Director

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—Christy J. Flanagan, of Port Arthur, Tex., one of Notre Dame's best ball carriers a half dozen years ago and more recently Navy backfield coach, was named athletic director at Duquesne University today.

He takes half the job held by Elmer Layden, who left today to become head coach at Notre Dame. Layden, one of the Irish "Four Horsemen," was Duquesne's head coach and athletic director.

Bach Is Head Coach.

Joe Bach, backfield coach under Layden, succeeded to the head coaching position. Flanagan in his new post will be in charge of the Duke's backfield.

The announcement of the appointment said Flanagan is regarded "as the country's outstanding tutor of backfield blocking."

A halfback at Notre Dame from 1925 to 1927, Flanagan has been associated with the great figures of the Ramblers in coaching positions since his graduation.

In 1929 he was at St. Louis University with Hartley (Hunk) Anderson, recently coach at Notre Dame, and in 1930 he was backfield coach with Noble Kizer at Purdue. The last three seasons Flanagan has handled the ball carriers of the Navy under E. E. (Rip) Miller, also of the Irish.

MAPLEWOOD HIGH RUNS WINNING STREAK TO 14

Maplewood's fourteenth consecutive basketball victory was gained in a last quarter rally when the Blue Devils defeated Beaumont, State champion, 24 to 18, last night at Maplewood. The score was tied at 18-all with seven minutes to play. Then Barney Anstett, Hollingworth and Layer, all scored field goals to provide Maplewood with the winning points.

It was the last high school game for Bill Panos, Beaumont scoring ace, who will begin his ninth semester tomorrow, so Panos celebrated by counting four field goals and three free throws. Dolph Uhlemeyer's two field goals and three charity shots was responsible for the other seven points.

After holding Maplewood to a four to four score at the end of the first period, Beaumont weakened and Maplewood assumed a 10 to 7 lead at the half. The winners also led at the beginning of the final session, 16 to 14.

BOEHMER RATED NO. 2 BY VALLEY TENNIS OFFICIALS

By Davison Obear.

Charles Davis, Oklahoma City player, heads the men's singles ranking of the Missouri Valley Tennis Association for 1933, according to the list announced last night by Karl Hodge, of this city, who served as chairman of the ranking committee. Davis and Jerome Sass, also of Oklahoma City, were ranked No. 1 in the men's doubles list.

During the Missouri Valley championship at Fort Smith, Ark., last June, Davis rose to great heights and won the singles title, sweeping aside Fred Royer, of Dallas, defending champion, in straight sets in the final round. Prior to entering the senior division, Davis showed steady improvement as a junior, winning many events for the younger players throughout the Missouri Valley territory.

Second place in the men's singles ranking was awarded to Gus Boehmer, St. Louis District titleholder. Although not participating in the Valley events, Boehmer captured the Middle West title at Omaha last season. Frank Brody, former Grinnell star, won the Iowa State championship and was finalist in the Des Moines District event, which record gave him third place.

Boehmer is the only St. Louis player named in the first ten. Robert Weinstock, local junior, was placed in the second group which is in alphabetical order. Kansas City placed three men in the first ten while Oklahoma City has two players listed.

The committee ranked only three teams in the men's doubles. Davis and Jass, placed No. 1, captured the Missouri Valley championship while William Kiley and Nelson McIninch, Kansas City team, received second place, having reached the final in the Valley tourney. Frank Brody and Ben Beckerman, Des Moines pair, won both the Iowa State and Des Moines District doubles titles to gain third place.

The rankings:

FIRST TEN—Singles—1, Charles Davis, Oklahoma City; 2, Gus Boehmer, St. Louis; 3, Frank Brody, Des Moines; 4, William Kiley, Kansas City; 5, Gerin Cameron, Tulsa; 6, Sterling Cutlip, Kansas City; 7, Arthur Voss, Topeka; 8, Nelson McIninch, Kansas City; 9, Jerome Sass, Oklahoma City; 10, Albert Rollins, Okmulgee, Ok.

SECOND GROUP—Joe Apple, Durant, Ok.; Ben Beckerman, Des Moines; Paul Belding, Little Rock; Max Everett, Des Moines; Jake Ingraham, Tulsa; Albert Upshur, Oklahoma City; Joe Von Ginkel, Des Moines; Robert Weinstock, St. Louis.

INSUFFICIENT DATA — Wray Brown, St. Louis; Junior Coen, Kansas City; Harris Coggeshall, Des Moines; Lindsay Franklin, Des Moines; Karl Hodge, St. Louis; Harold Surface, Kansas City.

MEN'S DOUBLES—1, Sass and Davis, Oklahoma City; 2, Kiley and McIninch, Kansas City; 3, Brody and Beckerman, Des Moines.

SYDNEY, Australia, Jan. 27. — Frederick J. Perry, star of the English Davis Cup team and United States singles champion, today furthered his claim to world tennis honors as he defeated Jack Crawford in straight sets in the final of the Australian championships.

Playing a dashing, faultless game, Perry won, 6—3, 7—5, 6—1. He also won the doubles title yesterday with his cup teammate, G. P. Hughes.

It was the fourt meeting between the world's two ranking amateur players and the third victory for Perry. The Australian's only triumph came in an Australian-English series a few weeks ago.

BILLIKENS TO HOLD SWIMMING CARNIVAL

Coach Marquard Schwarz of St. Louis University's swimming team will sponsor an invitational swimming carnival to be held in the school's pool, Feb. 16. Invitations will be mailed out to those not members of either the varsity or freshmen Billiken teams.

On the program will be a series of novelty races and an exhibition of water polo between teams picked by Schwarz. On Feb. 14, Schwarz, who was a member of the 1932 American Olympic team, will show motion pictures which were taken at the Olympic games. The pictures will be shown at the St. Louis U. auditorium on Lindell.

PRINCIPIA "C" FIVE TIES FOR THE LEAD

The Principia C team yesterday moved into a tie for first place with the Country Day C team in that division of the ABC Basketball League by defeating the John Burroughs C team in the last minute in their game at Howard gym, 21—20. The Principia team was in the lead all of the game, but in the last minute Burroughs rallied to come within one point; then the Page Avenue defense tightened. High point honors were shared by Holt of Principia, who had four field goals and two free throws, and Sherry of Burroughs, who had five field goals.

The Burroughs B team won its first game of the season when it defeated Principia B, 13—5, in a game that was one-sided from the start. Jimmy Blackman of Burroughs was high point man with two field goals and two free throws.

Dairies and Argus Fives Win.

The St. Louis Dairy five defeated the Kappas, 44 to 30 in a Pine Street Y. M. C. A. basketball game yesterday. The Argus five scored a 24—10 victory over the Metropolitans.

opposition made it rather hard to pick the standouts.

When the semifinals had been finished the list of eligibles seemed to narrow down to Ray Zarazza in the flyweight division, Jack Boshard in the bantam class, Joe Varner, a featherweight, and Wesley Leverich a light heavyweight.

Boshard was finally chosen because he disposed of both of his opponents in far more decisive style than his rivals.

Zarazza showed a nice left hand, a good poise, and straight, clean punches. But he lacked convincing power and only won by a small margin.

Varner showed the best form and poise of any boxer in the tourney, defeating John Ellison and that wildcat, Nick Lombardo; but in his two bouts he tired so badly in the last round that he was hard pressed to hold his lead. Lombardo, by the way, has the makings of a good boy, but he needs plenty of schooling.

Watch This Boy Grow.

LEVERICH, powerful young novice light heavyweight, was a most surprising product of three months of boxing education.

This boy has fighting instinct, plenty of "take it" courage, a crushing wallop and a natural fighting style. He would have been an even choice with Boshard for this writer's "best man in the show," but for the fact that in his final bout Tom Powers put him on the floor and raised a "mouse" under his left eye. Leverich showed his quality by getting up and giving Powers plenty.

Miniature Jack Dempsey.

THE trophy awarded the "best man of the evening" was a bronze statuette of Jack Dempsey. It was a real coincidence that Boshard was himself a miniature Jack Dempsey in fighting style and even more of a rushing cyclone than the Mighty Mauler was in his prime.

The coincidence goes still farther because Jack comes from Provo, Utah, where Dempsey himself lived for some years, and where he worked as a boy in the barber shop of Bill Boshard, Jack's father.

The four boys mentioned showed remarkable progress and there is not much doubt that the two more rugged lads, Leverich Boshard, will develop into first rank amateurs.

The progress shown by these youngsters, largely under mass instruction, almost passes belief. In a few days Benny Kessler will take the picked members of his squad under his wing for personal instruction. The boys will be tuned up in several bouts for the Western amateur championship events here, March 16, and it will be surprising if all four boys do not make a creditable showing.

Leverich and Boshard, by reason of their ruggedness and aggressiveness, appear likely to go farther than the other frailer lads.

The Betting Build-Up.

HAND-BOOK men here were displaying faces a yard long until last Wednesday, when the Fair Grounds track at New Orleans opened. Then, thanks to one little act of General Manager Joseph A. Murphy, the sun began to shine and the birds to sing for the local bookies.

With racing at Jefferson Park, the books were being steadily trimmed on the first and last races, by what is known as the "mutuel build-up." By spreading a sum of money on non-favorites in the mutuels just before the barrier lifted, the short-priced favorite's odds went soaring up from, let us say, 6 to 5 to 5 to 1.

In the meantime the manipulators of the build-up had wagered thousands of dollars on this very favorite around the country, on which they collected at the 5 to 1 odds.

In other words by investing a few hundreds in the mutuels, manipulators harvested thousands at the expense of the hand books.

This is the scheme that Baron Long worked at Caliente and for which he was demoted as an official and his entries barred.

The first and last races were chosen because the betting on these is always lightest. The result is that on these two events only a few hundred dollars are needed to shift the odds on the favorite materially.

A Case in Point.

THE hand-book man is helpless against this plot. The reason is that the handbookie is approached from the weak side—the favorite. Bookmakers always accept considerable sums on the favorite, when the horse is at 7 to 5 and under. It is on this kind that they make their money and stand to lose least. When bets of the $100 variety drift in on a 6 to 5 shot the bookie snaps them up. They are his bread and meat.

Now the bookmaker, through his service wire, is apprised of all the changes in prices, including post-time or final odds. If these show 6 to 5, he decides to keep all the money. If the odds shifted to 5 to 1, he would at once lay off his excess bets by wiring it in as comeback money, easing the burden on himself and keeping down the odds.

But since the man at the track could dump a last-minute $1000 or so on some other horse than the favorite even while the horses were at the post at Jefferson Park, there was no way for the new odds to be broadcast until after the field had left the pst.

The bookie, keeping all the bets on what he thought was a 6 to 5 favorite, later found he had to pay off on a 5 to 1 shot.

One local handbook has been hit several thousands in this manner. One 6 to 5 favorite receded to 8 to 1. Hence the long faces.

Murphy Lays a Stymie.

THE first day of the Fair Grounds meeting Judge Murphy laid a stymie for this procedure.

He had it announced over the service wire that hereafter all mutuel wagers would close two minutes before post time.

That means the hand book men will receive the final odds, the exact figures on which the payoff will be made.

If manipulators dump their build-up money, the bookies will have more than two minutes to unload some of their surplus.

period after a penalty assessed against Thorsteinson for what Referee McKinnon termed was jabbing a visiting player with the handle of his stick. While Joe was in the penalty box, the Greyhounds took advantage of the opportunity to score, Healey grabbing a pass from Mulvihill and banging the puck past Murray after 12 minutes, 10 seconds.

Neither side was able to count in the second session, although the play was fast and at times rough. Ralph "Bouncer" Taylor, Kansas City defense man, jabbed Leo Carbol and got a penalty, but although the Flyers stormed the Kansas City net with a four and five-man attack, they were unable to get through the tight defense of Porky Levine and his playmates.

Paddon was banished for a trip shortly after the start of the third period but the Flyers managed to stave off a score, but the St. Louis attempts to get past Porky Levine were all futile for the Kansas City goalie was in rare form, making many brilliant stops.

Swenson once broke through the Greyhound defense but Levine came out and stopped his shot; then, when Swede got the puck on the rebound and shot again, the disc hit Levine.

The Flyers attacked in force toward the close of the session when Gordon was in the penalty box but nothing resulted except that Kansas City took advantage of an opening to score again, Mulvihill counting on a pass from Buriand and then, as the timer had his hand on the siren to signal the close of the game, Ralph Taylor came through with the final Kansas City marker.

CANTON, O., TEAM BOWLS 1289 TO SET HIGH GAME MARK FOR YEAR

A new record for a single game was one of the high spots in last week's bowling throughout the country, according to figures released yesterday by A. B. C. officials at Chicago. The new high single of 1289 was established by the Sani-Flush team of Canton, O. Except for the one game, the team did not do so well, the other counts being 1102 and 926, for a 3317 total. In registering the big count, the individual scores were: Vognos, 288; Whippey, 245; Wuske, 246; Evans, 242 and Owens, 268.

For the second successive week, the Hamms of St. Paul rolled better than 3500 to pace the teams of the country. The total last week was 3532, while the previous week the quintet had a 3554 total. The team had games of 1038, 1283 and 1211. Ossie Ragogna was the high man for the aggregation with games of 258, 268 and 256 for a score of 782.

Among the individuals, C. H. Miller, a 60-year-old tenpinner from West New York, N. J., showed the way with a score of 794, the result of games of 258, 300 and 236. It was the first perfect game recorded by the veteran in the 25 years he has been connected with the sport.

Four other perfect games were recorded in league play during the week. They were credited to Jim Murgie of Philadelphia; William Studenski of Detroit; Harry S. Peyton of Chicago and Con Maloney of Kansas City, Mo.

Ten St. Louis quintets gained places in the "honor roll" with the Gus Krons, rolling in the A. B. C. League showing the way with 3276, followed by the Alhoffs, North St. Louis Scratch, 3264, and Alexanders, Major City, 3264. Ather high totals for local fives were: Hermanns, Major City, 3174; Gus Krons, Major City, 3163; Walter Freunds, Vescovo, 3150; Charles Krons, Major City, 3149; Bigaltes, Virginia, 3138; Alexanders, A. B. C. Scratch, 3131, and Say It With Flowers, Major City, 3113.

Kemper of the North St. Louis Scratch, paced the St. Louis individuals with a count of 762. Other high scores were: Dewees, Vescovos, 740; Kulage, Builders' League, 736; Holmes, Major City, 732; Hughes, Vescovos, 722; Schaefer, A. B. C. Scratch, 719; Weinstein, Major City, 711; Adolphson, Laclede League, 706, and Flanagan, A. B. C. Scratch, 702.

Referee—Dave Evans of Detroit. Linesmen—Robert Murphy and Jimmy Dunn.

Time of halves—45 minutes, with two extra periods of 15 minutes each in case of tie at end of regulation time.

Starting time—2:30 o'clock with preliminary beginning at 1 o'clock. Admission, 75 cents; 25 cents for women and children.

The Ben Millers, second placers of the St. Louis Soccer League, will face their hardest test of the season at Sportsman's Park this afternoon, when they tackle the Wieboldt Wonderbolts of Chicago in a second round U. S. F. A. challenge cup match. Play begins at 2:30 o'clock, with the St. Margarets and Busieks, a pair of independent clubs, meeting in the preliminary, scheduled for 1 o'clock. The Wieboldts have won 12 of 15 matches this season.

The Wieboldt-Miller game will be the second between the two elevens this season. In an exhibition match here on New Year's Day, the Wieboldts trimmed the locals, 3 goals to 2, after having lost to the Stix, Baer & Fullers the previous day, 3 to 1.

Wieboldts Appear the Favorites.

On season's records, the Windy City team appears the favorite. Whereas it has lost but three decisions, two to the Sparta Leaders and one to the Stix, the Millers have won six, lost six and tied two. The Wieboldts have scored 47 goals to 19 for the opposition, whereas the Millers ave tallied 36 times against 39 for the team's opponents. These figures give the Wieboldts a slight edge on the offense, while the figures indicate that the club with Julius Hjulian in goal and Tom Scott and Hugh Davidson, at fullback, has a much stouter defense than the Millers.

However, past cup matches have shown that previous records mean nothing when St. Louis teams meet out-of-town competition in the national title series. Thus indications are that the match will be as closely fought as was the exhibition battle between the two teams earlier in the season.

To Have Changed Lineups.

There will be changes in each team's lineup. Tal Mulroy will be at outside left for the Millers, while Scott has returned to fullback for the Wieboldts. Both men were out of the first game because of injuries. In addition, Billy Alexander's club will show a new forward, John Marshall, who previously played with the Sons of Malta team of Detroit.

To qualify for the second round, the Millers defeated the Andersons, 6 to 2, after the clubs had played a 4-4 draw, while the Wieboldts eliminated the Swedish-Americans, another Chicago entry, 5-1.

Dave Evans, of Detroit, will referee the match, assisted by "Ribby" Murphy and Jimmy Dunn.

Next Sunday, the Stix club will make its second appearance of the season in the competition, opposing the Sons of Malta, of Detroit. The Detroit eleven has practically the same lineup as the one which lost to the Andersons, 7 goals to 1, in the competition last season. Although idle today, the Stix players have continued practice and the club will be able to send its strongest team against the Michigan entry.

Celtics, Broken Up by Pro League, Retaliated by Breaking Up Circuit

Joe Lapchick

Powerful Basketball Team Now Playing Independently, Will Meet Renaissance Five at Coliseum Wednesday Night.

Seldom in any sport does a team attain such superiority over others in its league that officials break up that team on account of its sheer ability, but that is what happened a few years ago in the American Professional Basketball League.

And the Original Celtics, which play the Renaissance team in a title game here at the Coliseum, next Wednesday, were the players singled out for such action.

They Cleaned Up.

The Celtics, which just had come from the East to be sponsored by a Cleveland sportsman to play under the name of the Rosenblums, proceeded to burn up the league with victories. Split schedules were adopted, yet they continued to sweep all before them.

Then, at a summer meeting of league officials, a motion was adopted that prohibited any team in the American League from owning more than two members of the New York Celtics. This, of course, was a direct thrust at the Rosenblums.

After much protest, Manager Rose decided to accede to the league's ruling and the following season saw his stars scattered among all other teams in the circuit.

The players, of course, did not relish the idea of breaking up their combination, but since their contracts were sold to other clubs, they had to comply.

After one season of play, during which time the Celtic-Rosenblum pennant spell was broken, Joe Lapchick, Celtic captain, called a meeting of all his former teammates and it was agreed that all of them would refuse to report to their respective teams the following year.

Manager Rose, hearing of this plan, immediately got in touch with "Dutch" Dehnert, Davey Banks, Pete Barry, Carl Husta and Pat Berlihy and outlined a plan whereby he would reorganize the team as it originally was and let them tour the country as an independent team.

League Dissolves.

The plan carried and with it went the American League—the league dissolved after a meeting at which it was decided that the organization's drawing cards were no longer in its lineups and that, with the depression at its worst, it would be folly to go on another year.

But while the decision was fatal to the league, the Celtics have done much to promote basketball in the East and South since embarking on independent schedules.

On the present Southern trip alone, the Celts will have played no less than 18 college and university teams before they come into St. Louis, in addition to dozens of independent fives. They defeated Georgia Tech Thursday, 50 to 28. They have not lost a game as yet on the trip.

By winning firsts in all seven events the Downtown Y. M. C. A. swimming team defeated the Alton "Y" paddlers, 50 to 16, in a dual meet yesterday afternoon at the Downtown "Y." The Alton team finished second in only one event besides the relays and that was in the fancy diving contest.

BROWN TONEY WINS AT MIAMI AND PAYS $31

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—R. L. Woodard's Brown Toney, unable even to get into the money in three starts at Tropical Park, found his racing legs today and stepped away from the prohibitive choice, Agrarian, to win the Bellevue Purse of seven furlongs at Hialeah Park.

Only five three-year-olds answered the bugle call with Brown Toney easily outclassing his rivals. Agrarian, representing Mrs. F. J. Heller, and with Earl Porter in the saddle, was made the 2 to 5 choice but at the end of the sprint he was two lengths to the rear of the Woodard colt. The B. B. Stable's Herowin was third, a length and a half farther behind. C. V. Whitney's Sassafras and J. E. Widener's Flint Shot completed the field.

Lightly regarded, Brown Toney paid his few backers $31.70 for a $2 straight mutuel ticket.

Porter had better luck in the fourth and seventh races, however, winning the former with the long shot, My Purchase, and the closing number with the strongly-backed Waterway.

J. E. Smallman's Jim Crawford, sponsor of the bill to legalize betting in New York State, won his third straight race for his Canadian owner. He accounted for the two-year-old event at the short odds of 40 cents on the dollar.

LEADERS MEET TAILEND TEAMS IN MUNICIPAL BASKETBALL CONTESTS

Having turned in upsets last week, the bottom clubs in the Municipal Basketball League will try to further their interests against the leaders in the two games Tuesday night at Sherman Park. In the first game, the Y. M. H. A. will oppose the Greer A. C. at 8 o'clock, and in the second the Golubs will play the North St. Louis Turners.

The Golubs took the floor last Tuesday night with a record of four victories in five starts, but they lost another one when the Greer A. C. trimmed them, 34 to 22. However, the Golubs remained tied for the lead with the Y. M. H. A. team, when the "Y" squad dropped the other encounter to the Turners, 39 to 27.

The Greer A. C. is at the bottom, with one victory in six starts, while the Turners have a 3-3 record, so a victory for the Turners and the Greers will throw the race into a three-way tie.

In the girls' division doubleheader Tuesday night the P. R. C. U. five will meet the Notre Dame team at 8 o'clock and the S-K five will battle the Columbus Girls' club at 9 o'clock. The Barretts drew a bye.

MUHL INVITED TO SERVE ON FOOTBALL RULES COMMITTEE

"Stub" Muhl of the University City High School has been invited to become a member of the National Football Coaches' Rules Committee, which will meet in New York, Feb. 3, to consider suggested changes in the football rules.

Muhl is one of five high school coaches of the United States who have been asked to serve, along with 25 college coaches. The committee will recommend its findings to the National Rules Committee, which meets in New York a week later.

The University City coach's invitation came from Lou Little of Columbia, committee chairman, following recommendation by Dana X. Bible, president of the National Football Coaches' Association. Muhl does not know whether he will be able to accept.

"Bunny" the Only Legal Game

RABBITS are the only game now in season since the legal open period of furbearers, including racoons and opossum, closed Jan. 15. All fish are eligible to the creel now excepting trout and the season for that fish will be reopened March 1. The legal season for gigging fish closes Feb. 1 and will not be reopened until June 1.

Missouri's next outdoor sports season of importance opens with the trout season which also marks the reopening of all State parks where trout fishing is provided. Preparations are now being made by the State Game and Fish Department to have the park accommodations, including hotel and cabins at Bennett Spring State Park, near Lebanon, Montauk State Park near Licking, and Roaring River State Park near Cassville, in readiness for the season's advent. Trout fishing also may be had at Alley Spring State Park near Emminence but no accommodations other than camp ground is provided by the State. Leases for concessions are now being prepared and the department likely will have awarded contracts to operators of the hotels and cabins within the next few weeks.

Spring Trout Season.

Special interest in the trout fishing waters of the State parks are expected by the State game officials to be shown by anglers this spring following the policy, established in 1933, to stock only the State-owned and controlled waters with this artificially produced fish. Principal distribution will be at Bennett Spring, Roaring River and Montauk State parks. This last park contains more trout fishing water than any other State recreation ground. In addition to the water on the park proper there are more than 30 miles of excellent trout fishing water down stream from the springs which form the headwaters of Current River.

Planting Encouraged.

Anglers who have known those rare places off the State parks where trout fishing has been good will have to encourage more trout planting in such places by the Federal Bureau of Fisheries or join the hordes which usually go to the public fishing waters, it is pointed out.

Some of the streams which formerly had been stocked with trout from State hatcheries which under the present policy will not receive State produced rainbows are Robidoux Creek in Pulaski County, Crane Creek in Stone County, Dry Creek in Crawford County, Little Piney River in Phelps County, Big Buffalo in Morgan County, Kerr Creek in Lawrence County and the Big Piney River in Phelps County.

These small streams, although limited in their capacity for rainbows, have provided much excellent wild trout fishing in years past.

Two seasons ago a fly fisherman who had experienced little success in competing with the worm and liver slingers on one of the State park streams, stopped on his return on the highway bridge over the Little Piney near Yancey Mills to watch two fly fishermen whipping the waters of the little stream below. He was considerably chagrined when he saw the pair creel three rainbows each within a few minutes. And every one of the creeled fish was bigger than any he had seen taken from the State park stream.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Preusch of Minneapolis, are the only champions of last year to enter the Midwestern figure skating championships which will begin tomorrow morning at the Winter Garden. They won the pair skating event and also were victors in the waltzing contest, which is an added feature in the meet each year, but is not part of the title competition.

This year they will compete in the men's and women's singles and also in the pair skating event, which will be one of the features of the evening program, which will begin at 7 o'clock.

The morning session will be used for the school figures, which are the highest scoring medium of the contest, but which are very dull for spectators, as the "schools" are usually skated on figure eights and the skater must not vary a stroke more than six inches at any point.

The night session will be devoted to free skating which is like an exhibition of all the spins, jumps and steps the skaters can put together to form graceful compositions, with music. Each entrant will skate 3½ minutes in the singles and 4 minutes in the pair events.

Besides the Midwestern championships, the St. Louis Skating Club will also hold the Missouri State championships and contestants from Kansas City and St. Louis will compete for these titles.

The entrants from Kansas City are: Mrs. Henry Murdock, Dr. N. Ockerblod, Miss Dora Nass, Earl Steck, Mrs. M. Chapman and Virginia Bucher who competed here last year.

William Swallinder and Frances Johnson of Minneapolis, are also in town to join Katherine Durbrow of White Fish Bay, Wis., who has been working out here for the past month.

Local skaters entered include Elizabeth Ann Reflow, Myra Jean Azbe, Oliver Haupt, William R. Cady, Len Fogassey, Ruth English, Jean Schulte and Bob Piros.

The judges sent to St. Louis by the United States Figure Skating Association are Theresa Weld Blanchard of Boston, former national pair skating champion; Ethel Bijur and Bedell Harned of New York, who are also pair skating champions, having held the junior national title. They will be the officials in charge of awards in both the Midwestern and Missouri State championships.

SUGAR CREEKS MEET DELUGACHS TONIGHT

The Granite City Pals, now known as the Golubs in the St. Louis Basketball Association League, will be given a chance to show their power in a game with the Y. M. H. A. five as part of the triple-header basketball program scheduled at the St. Louis University gymnasium tonight. The game begins at 7 o'clock.

The Illinois five has been campaigning as an independent team for several seasons.

The second game will bring together the Wolfs and the Bly-Moss quintet at 8 p. m. In the final contest, the first-round champions, the Sugar Creeks, will face the Delugach team.

GROUP HONORS ARE AT STAKE IN MUNICIPAL SOCCER GAMES

Municipal League soccer clubs play a regular round of matches today and contests in several of the divisions, in which the titles are still undecided, should be highly interesting. Only two more rounds of competition remain after today's contests before the start of the annual elimination series.

The Diaz team can win the Carondelet junior title with a victory over the German Sport Club. At present, the Diaz lead their rivals by three points and a victory will put them five ahead, with but two more to play. Should the Diaz win, the eleven will qualify to oppose Holy Rosary of Fairground, for the city junior honors.

With a six-point lead, the Spartons can clinch the Sherman Park honors with a victory or tie in the match with St. Edwards, the tailender in the group. Another team, which can qualify for the eliminations, is St. Hedwig in the Sodality group at Concordia Park. The club plays the last place St. Agnes aggregation.

At Fairground No. 2, the one, two clubs, the Clearys and Kellys fight it out for supremacy. Leading their rivals by three points, a victory for the Clearys will settle the group championship. With but three points separating the four clubs, the Fairground No. 4 race is certain to remain "up in the air" for at least another week. At Carondelet, the leading German Sport Club faces the SS. Mary and Josephs, while La Sociedad Espanola opposes Uncle's Place.

The complete schedule, with referees, the first match in each group starting at 2 o'clock, follows:

The marriage service was read at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Adami by the Rev. Peter J. Dooley of the Church of the Holy Redeemer in Webster Groves. Miss Helen Adami was maid of honor for her sister, and the bridegroom's brother-in-law, Lee Verdin Langan, was best man.

The bride wore her traveling costume, an ensemble of maroon-colored, diagonally woven wool, trimmed with broad bands of mink. The gown was severely plain with the exception of a deep round collar of the material banded in fur, which was worn outside of a short jacket. The three-quarter length, bell-shaped jacket sleeves were also fur-trimmed. She wore a red felt hat to match, and a shoulder corsage of orchids.

Miss Helen Adami wore a dark blue tailored gown trimmed with white pique pleated at the high neck line, and a small dark blue hat. Her flowers were gardenias.

A buffet breakfast followed the ceremony, and afterwards Mr. and Mrs. Langan departed by motor for Gallup, where they will make their home.

THIS NEW YORK

By LUCIUS BEEBE

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.

THE Beaux Arts Ball has come and gone again. The last broken hat has been swept up at the Waldorf and the last Princeton student, somewhat unconvincingly disguised as the Emperor Ho-Qwa with an orange bathrobe thrown over his dinner jacket, has been propelled, protestingly into the cold of mid-morning Park avenue.

New York's attitude toward the Beaux Arts is much like that of the Yankee rustic who supposed he'd "have to go to town on a bust, and, gosh, how he hated it." Throughout the entire year it waits in a state of acute apprehension for what is certain to be a delirium-tremedous calamity with its fingers in its ears and eyes closed, and then rigs itself out in a rented costume and has a falling down good time. The year before last, when the costume scheme was Colonial, was more dignified than usual. The men's costumes were too costly for fist fighting and the ladies discovered that falling down in those wide pannier skirts was virtually impossible, but that once down there was no getting up.

This year, however, the costumes were largely Oriental and joy was gratifyingly unconfined. We went in a posse, which included Lloyd Smith, the boy wolf of Wall street, and Libby Holman, but found ourselves having breakfast eight hours later with Frank Shields, Nancy Carroll and an unidentified youth dressed as a thirteenth century Venetian fish peddler, but wearing a single eyeglass. It was all very confusing.

IF ever the Museum of the City of New York should require the services of an artist, to record imperishably the era at once grave and gay, and now irrevocably with last year's snows, of gas lamps and horse cabs and the supremacy of Murray Hill, Frederick Dorr Steele would be the man to do it. If the name means nothing to you, just think back to your first impressions of the appearance of Sherlock Holmes and his friend Dr. Watson, derived from the black and white line cuts in old editions of A. Conan Doyle's works. Deer-stalker cap, plaid greatcoat, bulldog pipe and long sensitive face, Fred Steele created the popular concept of Holmes, and he is alive today, probably lounging about the library of the Players in Gramercy Park. Of all living artists he could do best justice to the New York of 40 years ago when the hansoms in front of the newly opened Waldorf were the smartest rigs in town, with Berry Wall's latest versions of evening dress in his opera box were recorded for a breathless world in next morning's papers, and when Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish was revolutionizing social usage by serving champagne from soup to souffle instead of the sequence of wines previously in vogue. Those were the days when it was good to live.

WE had the rare privilege the other evening of seeing a famous hotel proprietor get bad restaurant service in his own establishment, and a rare treat it was, too, except that we thought for a minute he might have apoplexy. First of all the hapless waiter served Melba toast for the caviar, and we noted a flush of annoyance mount to the great man's face. Then the sherry appeared in cocktail glasses and it was apparent his blood pressure was mounting to Union League Club proportions. Finally the unhappy fellow actually shook the bottle of Chateauneuf du Pape while uncorking it, and we knew that the explosion of Black Tom Island was as a popgun to what was in store.

First the great man broke a serving platter over the waiter's head. Then he kicked him in the slack of the pants. Then he discharged him. The rest of the meal was served by the maitre de hotel of New York's smartest restaurant in person, while three waiter captains assisted at clearing the cloth and submitting the cheese for inspection. The head waiter who had hired the maladroit garcon was discharged with the brandy (Courvoisier. '75), and the wine room checker who had sent up the wrong glasses was sacked with the cigars (Belinda Fancy Talee, claro). "In my own house, too," roared the great man. "I believe the fellow would have served plover's eggs in a soap dish."

From the Turkish baths in the subcellar to the ballroom on the roof, the Biltmore is enjoying a tremendous revival of business. The lounges and Madison room are crowded and the decorative scheme of the lobby revised. The timepiece in the alcove opposite the Forty-third street entry that became famous for the trysting phrase, "under the clock at the Biltmore," was taken down in the progress of redecoration, but so many people complained about the absence of the old landmark that just for the sake of sentiment the management put it back.

Officers of the St. Louis Walther League, elected at a recent meeting, are Ralph Gaebler, president; William C. Krato, Miss Olga Hohengarten and Miss Rhoda Flachsbart, vice presidents, Miss Estelle Martin, secretary; Erwin Koch, treasurer, and Miss Edith Hildebrand, entertainer.

Debutantes Give 'Leap Year' Dance

THE last large party and one of the gayest of the season took place Friday night when a group of young women entertained at a "leap year" dance at the St Louis Country Club. The guest list included about 70 young men and the hostesses were debutantes, second and third year girls.

Contrary to custom the young women called for and escorted their guests to the club, and the tap room was closed to the men unless accompanied by their hostess. A feature of the party was a feminine "stag line" of 50 girls. At 1:30 a. m. a buffet breakfast was served.

Preceding the dance, dinners were given by Miss Elsie Ford, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Ford Jr., 54 Westmoreland place; Miss Mary Elizabeth Bascom, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Bascom, 52 Portland place; Miss Louise Goddard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Goddard of Brentmoor, and Miss Alita Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel C. Davis, 13 Westmoreland place.

The bride and her daughter, Miss Ellen Stokes, who was maid of honor, descended the staircase and passed to the altar through an aisle of white satin ribbon fastened to wicker standards. Miss Ellen Stokes wore a gown of chartreuse tinted chiffon designed on soft clinging lines with the skirt flaring from a low-placed flounce into a train. The sleeveless bodice was trimmed with shoulder drapery shirred into the waistline, and in front were starched chiffon flowers centered with brown. Cascades of the chiffon adorned the skirt at the back. Miss Stokes wore brown slippers and carried spring flowers tied with brown ribbon to match.

The bride wore a smartly cut gown of deep eggshell crepe, with chartreuse crepe slippers and carried an armful of white lilacs tied with chartreuse ribbon. The gown was molded closely to the figure and was untrimmed except by small buttons of the material and an elaborate clasp of rhinestones and jade which fastened the belt. The bodice was cut to a V in front and slightly rolled, and at each side were short crepe draperies. Long close-fitting sleeves depended from cut-out shoulders and low epaulets. The skirt was designed with a train.

The bridegroom's mother wore ashes of roses satin with jade accessories and a corsage of green orchids.

C. Harvey Moore of Brookline, Mass., was best man, and the ushers were John Montgomery McTeer Jr., Jack E. Thomas, Ralph d'Oench and Southwood Morse.

Hobbies

OF PROMINENT ST. LOUISANS

THE GREAT OUTDOORS—BY AUGUST A. BUSCH

My hobby is the great outdoors with all that it offers. I love horses, dogs, cattle, fowl and wild game, and have raised them extensively on Grant's Farm, where I located my home so that I might indulge this particular fancy. Of my large herd of deer I have raised many on my own grounds. One of my principal hobbies has been the breeding of hogs and the crossing of German wild boars, which I imported, with the domestic Duroc. This resulted in a new breed of hog from which is produced as fine sausage as I believe can be made anywhere.

In Cooperstown, New York, I have developed trout streams in the wooded canyons and nothing affords me greater pleasure than to watch my grandchildren feed and call some of the big fellows by names they have given them.

Tree life is a special hobby of mine, and if I may depart from the subject of hobbies to the more important one of realities, I would say that no contribution will prove a greater or more important one to nature and man than President Roosevelt's reforestation plan, which means not only more and bigger trees, but a more plentiful water supply.

I only too well recall the warning sounded many years ago by my esteemed but now deceased father, and his words have always lingered with me, to the effect that there would be a lack of nurtured subsoil and a lack of water in nature's reservoirs unless our forests were preserved.

Therefore I feel that one of the finest and most helpful hobbies anyone can have is the preservation of our tree growth, so thoughtfully and ably undertaken and promoted by our President, and now receiving special attention at the hands of our City officials.

The conservation of wild life is another worthwhile hobby. I have a decided feeling of satisfaction in knowing that at St. Peters, Missouri, I have provided a haven for wild fowl.

May both these movements grow and prosper as time goes on for the benefit and enjoyment of this and future generations.

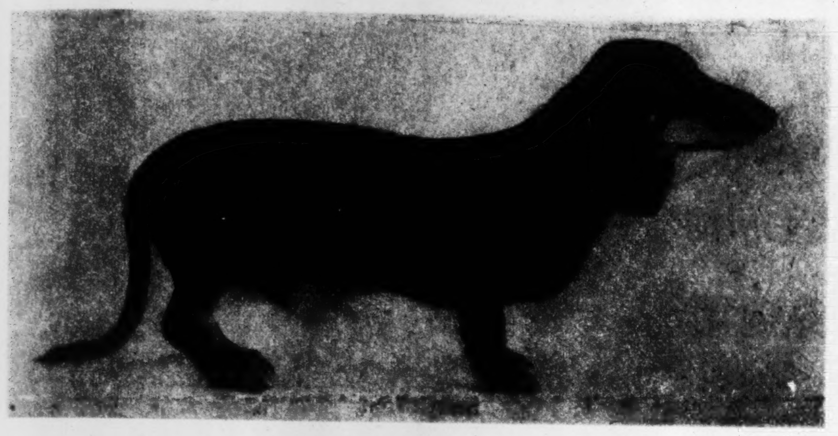
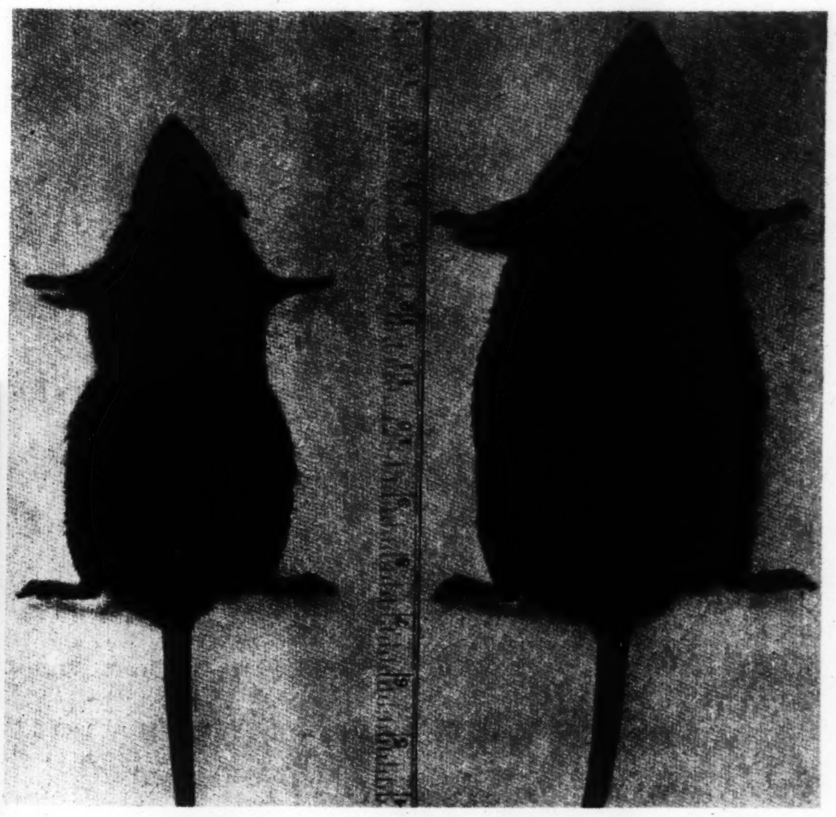
ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

A Fluid That Makes the Body Grow Again

The Remarkable Discovery Made by Dr. Herbert M. Evans of the University of California and What He Has Accomplished With It So Far.



Two dachshunds from the same litter; the one in the upper photograph was treated with an injection of the growth hormone fluid daily for 10 months, the other was not.



Two rats—litter mates. The one at the right received the hormone injection and the other grew normally.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

DR. HERBERT M. EVANS

BERKELEY, California.

WORKING with rats and mice and dogs in his laboratory at the University of California here, Dr. Herbert M. Evans, professor of anatomy and noted biologist, has discovered a means of promoting growth of human beings and the lower animals long after natural growth has stopped.

After probing for four years into the mysteries of the ductless glands, with exhaustive experiments on both man and beast, he has created what he calls a growth hormone—a fluid which, injected hypodermically into the blood stream, causes the individual to attain greater size of body.

A 10-year old girl of Santa Barbara, whose growth had stopped suddenly, has been made to add five inches to her height in two years.

A dog, an ordinary dachshund, treated daily with the extract, was half again as large as its untreated litter mate after six months, and after 10 months was twice as large.

Rats, similarly treated with injections of the extract, have grown to relatively enormous size and weight, and mice, under the treatment, are being grown to normal adult size in 90 hours from birth.

The nature of the growth hormone which Dr. Evans has produced is being kept a carefully guarded secret. With the reticence characteristic of the scientist, he has refrained from discussing his work except before professional groups at sessions of national scientific organizations. He has divulged the fact, however, that this extraordinary growth extract is a product of one of the smaller glands of the head—a gland producing hormones, those mysterious chemical substances which are secreted by ductless glands and which play such a vital part in balancing the mechanism of the body.

Creation of the extract followed intensive research which convinced the Berkeley scientist that growth is controlled by hormones and that failure to attain normal growth—either in human beings or the lower animals—is due principally to a deficiency in these strange substances of the body. Much of his research centered in study of the pituitary gland, a small rounded body situated near the root of the nose and attached to the base of the brain. For some time scientists have believed its activity had much to do with the size attained by the individual, but little was actually known about its function. His problem was to discover just how it controlled growth, the results of his experiments so far indicate he is well on the way to a solution.

Dr. Evans recently gave a technical resume of his work to the American Congress of Physicians and Surgeons in Washington, D. C., and the assemblage received his treatise with marked enthusiasm. To the scientists he explained his work in considerable detail. To the lay world, however, he offers only the following explanation:

"Through experiments with rats and dogs, we have developed what we call a growth hormone which stimulates the glands and causes them to develop their own secretions necessary to establish or to restore that perfect balance of metabolism which we shall call health.

"The public is already familiar with the use of insulin as a cure for diabetes. Insulin is an internal secretion which can be manufactured and supplied artificially to take the place of the natural secretions which, in the case of diabetes, the body fails to manufacture. The same is done with thyroid extract."

In Dr. Evans' Berkeley laboratories, dachshunds are being bred for experiments with the mysterious growth hormone.

Two pure-bred animals, litter-brothers of equal weight and size and identical in appearance, were used recently as the basis for an experiment in controlling growth.

"After six months of daily dosage with the growth hormone," Dr. Evans relates, "the dog we had picked for our subject had increased to one and a half times the size of its litter mate to whom none of the hormone had been given. Its weight was double.

"In ten months the dog which had undergone the daily injections of the hormone was nearly double the size of its brother."

Rats, similarly treated, have shown like results. Those receiving the hormone injections have grown larger and heavier than their litter mates.

The case of the little girl in Santa Barbara which astounded scientists, is cited as showing what the discovery may mean to human beings

"Miss J. M.," as she is identified in the laboratory records, seemed doomed to dwarfdom. Nearly two years ago, when she was 8 years of age, she stood 35 inches, which is regarded as the normal height for a 3-year-old child. Physicians and specialists examined her, prescribed various forms of treatment and made every effort to stimulate her retarded growth.

When the family heard of the experiments being conducted by Dr. Evans an appeal was sent to him to see what he could do. Some of the growth hormone was sent to Santa Barbara. Injections were given hypodermically and still are being given. The result is that the child has grown nearly five inches.

"WE are not trying to make bigger human beings," Dr. Evans explains. "We are trying to make better ones. We cannot remodel human beings like clay in the hands of the potter, but through a better knowledge and control of the endrocrines we can help mankind to realize completely his possibilities of mental efficiency and physical capacity."

Every Monday morning, in the modern laboratory where Dr Evans nd his staff conduct their research, 800 mice are born. So perfectly conducted are the manipulations of the laboratory to meet the requirements of the operators, that the mating of the parent mice is timed to bring approximately 800 baby mice every Monday morning. The hour—almost the minute—of their arrival is according to laboratory schedule.

In long, regular rows of wired cages as immaculate as the ward of a modern hospital, the families of mice are kept and cared for as carefully as though they were human beings. Every step in the process of growth stimulation is accurately chronicled in the records. With the use of the growth hormone, the mice are brought from birth to sexual maturity in 90 hours and all effects upon size and sex are noted carefully.

"We hesitate to have anything sensational published about this work in endrocrine research," said Dr. Evans, "but the simple truth about what is being done through work of this kind with the ductless glands is more sensational than fiction could be."

The existence of the pituitary gland was known as long ago as the year 200 A. D., the time of the Roman physician, Galen, but its function was not then understood or even vaguely known. In fact, it got its name from the erroneous belief that its purpose was that of secreting a fluid to lubricate the throat. This idea was exploded by Conrad Schneider as early as 1660, but no other function of the gland was discovered and it came to be regarded as merely a vestigial relic of no particular importance to its possessor.

Now, although much remains to be determined as to its functions, it is known that one of its functions is the promotion of growth. Physicians now are easily able to trace cases of giantism, or overgrowth, to abnormal pituitary glands and likewise cases of dwarfism can be traced to deficiencies in this gland's work. Not only is it a factor in the physical development of human beings, but of the lower animals as well. It is found in all

CHILDISH faces—smiling, crying, beaming — flashing across the silver screen, capturing the hearts of millions of people. Then oblivion. Such is the fate of the child screen prodigy. Of all the strange phenomena developed in the motion picture industry, that of the child players is the strangest. They cannot carry through to enjoy a prolonged success. Only one, so far, Madge Evans, has been able to click as an adult.

Occasionally a familiar name will reappear in electric lights to reclaim its forgotten popularity. The public usually flocks to see the child now grown up, to witness the change brought on by additional years. But that is all. Much as we hate to, we must admit that the one-time child star has not made the grade. He or she was charming as a child, but as a grown-up person proves disappointing.

So far the only exception to the rule is Madge Evans. One of the most popular of all baby stars, Miss Evans already has won her spurs as a full-fledged actress. She is accepted as a most attractive leading lady, and studio officials claim that in another year she will be ready for stardom.

How different the story of the beautiful Miss Evans from those which may be told about other child stars—Jackie Coogan, Wesley Barry, Baby Peggy, Ben Alexander, Davy Lee, Farina, Mickey Daniels, Joe Cobb and a few others of like popularity. Today their names are screen memories.

Many years ago Charlie Chaplin made "The Kid" and at the same time made Jackie Coogan the most popular of all child stars. He was really a "boy wonder." His earnings ran as high as $20,000 weekly. But as his childlike charm faded so did his popularity.

The two pictures he has made in recent years met with only slight success. Now, as a student at Santa Clara University, he is making one more stab at the movies—starring in a series of two-reel collegiate pictures. But there is no reason for believing that the public response to these films will be unduly enthusiastic.

Baby Peggy followed closely on the heels of Jackie's popularity and attained a success almost equal to his. For a while there was no doubt about her being the darling of the screen. Then she reached the ungainly age and disappeared from sight. A recent attempted comeback at the age of 17 proved most disappointing.

Wesley Barry, one of the best-known child stars, is now a successful orchestra leader in the East, but there no longer is a place for him on the screen. The public which acclaimed him as a child appeared quite indifferent to his attempted return as a mature actor.

BEN ALEXANDER, who starred as a youngster in the "Buster Brown" series, came very close to staging a comeback with his performance in "All Quiet on the Western Front," but he couldn't seem to follow that with anything which particularly pleased the public.

When Davy Lee appeared in "The Singing Fool" with Al Jolson, he was generally hailed as the greatest find since Jackie Coogan. But he made only a few pictures and then disappeared, to join the other vanishing juveniles.

Baby Le Roy, the latest addition to the ranks of the infant thespians, apparently represents an even more transitory type: that of the actor who becomes passe almost before reaching the point of conscious art. He has been a player for little more than a year, and the best-informed opinion here says that he is already through. He has been replaced in a picture now in production by Richard Arlen Jr., aged 7 months.

It wasn't so many years ago that Mitzi Green was being acclaimed as a most brilliant young screen actress, but she's not in the movies any more, though she is a talented singer and mimic and is by no means forgotten. This also may be said of Farina, Joe Cobb, Mickey Daniels and others who attained a high degree of popularity as members of the famous "Our Gang" comedies.

Of them all, only Madge Evans has survived. She is the single exception to one of Hollywood's most consistent rules—that child stars do not enjoy success after they have grown up.

Madge didn't begin her childhood career as an actress but as a model. Beautiful since the day she was born, her laughing face furnished inspiration for numerous artists. She had already earned some $30,000 as a model by the time she made her debut with the old World Film Company at the age of 5. Her first appearance was in "Editha's Burglar," one of Carlyle Blackwell's starring vehicles, and her success was instantaneous. She stole the picture. In her very next production, "The Little Duchess," she was starred. Nearly everything her baby hands touched turned to gold.

Following "The Little Duchess" came a series of starring films in which little Madge's angelic face charmed the entire movie-going public. One after another came "The Adventures of Carol," "The Volunteer," "The Gates of Gladness," "Sudden Riches," "The Burglar," "Wanted—A Home" and "Wanted—A Mother." By that time Madge was firmly established.

However, there had to be an end. Unlike most movie parents, Madge's mother and father were more interested in their child's health than her fame. They had been firm in not allowing her to be overworked. So these pictures were spread over a period of five years.

That brought her to the awkward age of 10, and there was time for only one more film before she was withdrawn from the public eye to lead the normal life of any ordinary little girl. "Heidi" was chosen. It was produced by the Prizma Company, the first film ever to be made in color. Because of this novelty, as well as Madge's delightful acting, the picture proved a sensation.

Thus, while at the very height of her popularity, Madge was withdrawn from the atmosphere of grease paint and cameras. In the Evans' country home in Westchester County, New York, she forgot all about motion pictures. Her time was taken up entirely by private tutors and the ordinary activities of a normal, happy girl.

Seven years elapsed before Madge again was allowed to appear before the public. Her name was forgotten by movie fans.

"Looking back, I realize that it was the time spent away from any sort of acting which was the most important to my subsequent career as an actress," she declares.

"If my parents hadn't removed me from picture work when they did, I should probably have been a total flop in a few more years. Of all stars, child actresses probably have the briefest vogue. Inevitably they grow lank and awkward, overnight it seems, and nobody wants them any longer.

"This is a hard blow to a child, who, uncomprehending, suffers more than philosophic elders when they meet the same fate. Such an experience is apt to give a sensitive child a definite inferiority complex, which never can be outgrown. It is a big drawback in later years, when the child again tries to recapture a nearly forgotten popularity."

At the age of 17, Madge, by now a lovely young creature with flaxen hair, returned to acting—this time apparently to stay. She did not return immediately to the screen, however. The legitimate stage attracted her instead, and she began by securing a role in George Kelly's Broadway production of "Daisy Mayme."

NEW YORK audiences responded instantly to her wholesome simplicity and charm and critics gave her a hearty welcome when she appeared in her second production, Noel Coward's comedy, "The Marquise." Again she began a steady rise to stardom.

Four other stage hits followed in glittering succession: "Our Betters," "Dread," "The Conquering Male" and "Philip Goes Forth." Meanwhile, during the summer lull on Broadway, she appeared in two motion pictures, "Classmates" and "Banks of the Wabash." She had still to see Hollywood for the first time, since these and her childhood photoplays were all made in the East. It was inevitable that movie producers should be impressed by this girl who had done the impossible—who had broken the consistent rule that child prodigies are failures as adult actors. It happened also that at this time Hollywood was roaring for promising talent from Broadway.

A representative of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio saw her in "Philip Goes Forth." He was so impressed with her acting that he went backstage and refused to leave the theater until he had persuaded her to sign a long-term contract. This brought her to Hollywood immediately after the FOUR men adrift in an open boat, without food or water, under the burning sun of the Pacific. At the end of seven days they were half mad with hunger and thirst, faced with certain death. As a last desperate expedient they cast lots to see which one should die in order that his body might for a time sustain the others. In the two weeks that followed two of the four were sustained by the two who had drawn the lot that spelled death.

Captain Hosmer of the bark Janet lived through that experience to tell of it afterwards. He was master of many another whaling ship, one of those Massachusetts seamen who pursued Leviathan around the world, from the lotus islands of the South Seas to the ice pack of Arctic and Antarctic waters.

Their adventures—in fighting and killing the whales, when once they had chased them through the Seven Seas—form one of the most remarkable chapters in American maritime history. It is a chapter which is now for the first time set down in entirety in a book called "Lowered Boats," by Foster Rhea Dulles, published by Harcourt, Brace & Company, in New York.

The men who went down to the sea in whaling ships must have been of a hardy breed, for they endured the most incredible hardships. Each time the boats were lowered on the cry of "There she blows!" they risked sudden death. They suffered scurvy, frostbite, sunstroke, massacre by natives and every other form of death, privation and misery. "Lowered Boats" is full of hair-raising stories, a stirring chronicle of heroism and villainy and violence.

Whaling began on the New England coast as a hazardous enterprise, in which all who partook shared in the toil and danger and in the spoils. The man of superior ability and daring, with the capacity to command others, could work his way up from the forecastle to the cabin. And, once in the captain's berth, he might become the owner of his ship.

This was true in the early days of whaling, at the end of the eighteenth century and the beginning of the nineteenth, when little Nantucket Island led the whole seaboard in the number of whaling ships and in the wealth of oil brought back. Officers and crews of the whaling ships came from the same social level. They were all of good New England stock, and in the development of the whaling industry democracy worked as it was intended to work, Dulles records.

But as the trade grew, it lost this characteristic. With the wave of prosperity and expansion that swept over the country after the War of 1812, more and more people had money to buy spermaceti candles instead of tallow candles, which were inferior. Whale oil in the lamps of the period gave the best light then available. From a modest beginning, whaling rose to the rank of a major industry.

NEW BEDFORD, Massachusetts, on the mainland, soon supplanted the island of Nantucket as the principal whaling port. Ship owners grew wealthy, built mansions on Johnny Cake Hill, developed pretensions to aristocracy. Whaling crews were drawn from every possible source. They included escaped convicts and Green Mountain farm boys, store clerks looking for adventure, and half-savage natives brought from the South Seas, black, white, yellow, every color and almost every race. Of course, the democracy of the sea was at an end. The shares or "lays" of common sailors were cut to the bone. This was done partly by overcharging for the outfit which the green hand had to buy. Often seamen returned from a voyage of three or four years' duration owing the ship owner money.

Few men ever signed for a second voyage. They got enough the first time, and small wonder. In the early days they went out for the right whale, which was a comparatively docile creature. Later, particularly in the South Pacific, they hunted the fierce sperm whale almost exclusively. "A good average specimen, such as the nineteenth-century whalemen delighted to capture, a 60-barrel sperm, has been found to be 60 feet in length, 24 feet in circumference, with a tail spread of seven feet, a 14-foot jaw, and a coat of blubber from five to nine inches thick," Dulles writes. The sperm whale would often deliberately attack the small boat containing the harpooner and his oarsmen.

"One day in 1832 the boats of the ship Hector of New Bedford were lowered after whales. In attempting to harpoon a huge sperm the mate's boat was stove in and its oarsmen hurled into the sea. Captain John O. Morse thereupon took up the attack himself in another boat, but before he could maneuver into position the infuriated beast rushed at him and, 'taking the boat in its mouth, held it right up on end out of the water and shook it all to pieces in a moment.' Captain Morse himself fell from a height of 30 feet.

"Two boats were crushed and their crews scattered. The water was thick with the seamen's bobbing heads and the floating wreckage of their craft. Moreover, the whale refused to make off and appeared ready to snap up anything which came his way. Fortunately for all concerned, it was an empty keg which momentarily attracted his attention.

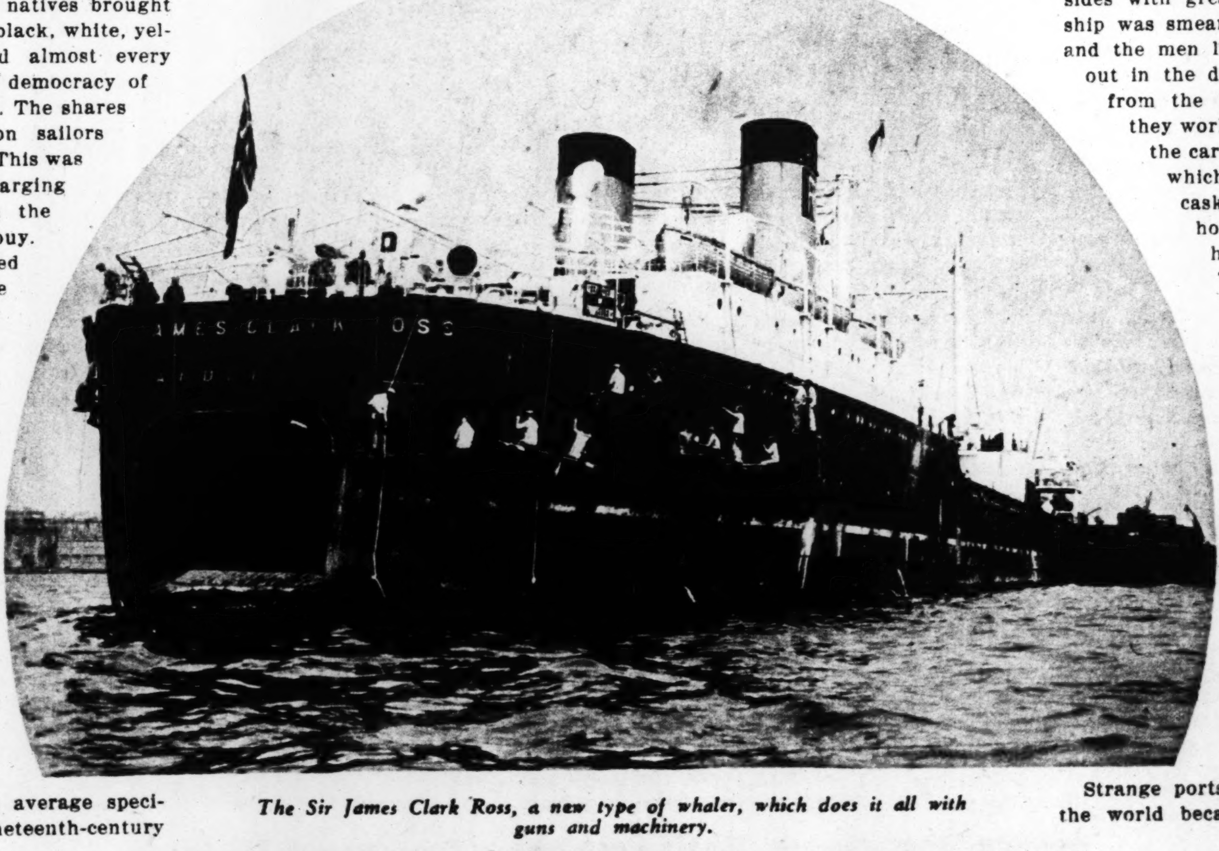
"A third boat from the Hector now took up the fight, not staying to rescue the half-drowned oarsmen of the other craft, who were left to keep themselves afloat as best they could. The whale quickly caught sight of this new enemy and rushed upon it with his ponderous jaws crunching with a hollow sound heard even aboard the ship. The newcomers frantically backed water and, pulling for their lives, were chased by the angry whale for a half a mile, his head at times not more than six or eight inches from the boat. The terrified oarsmen were about to leap into the water when the tiring whale unexpectedly shifted his course. They now turned on him and succeeded in pulling up to his side. A lance shot from the boatheader's steady hand and was buried deep in the animal's massive throat. With one tremendous convulsion of his giant frame, he sank back dead."

When the dead whale was alongside the ship, the most unpleasant task of the voyage began—"trying out" the whale's blubber. It was reduced to oil in great cauldrons set up in the ship's hold, after it was cut off the whale by the men, who were required to clamber over the whale's slippery sides with great knives. The whole ship was smeared with blood and oil and the men lived during the trying out in the dense smoke that arose from the boiling blubber. Too, they worked night and day until the carcass was reduced to oil, which was stored away in casks. This might be 48 hours or it might be 70 hours.

Sometimes they had scarcely got the ship to rights again when the cry would come from the masthead, "There she blows." The weary process would have to be gone through with again. Several diarists described the ship trying out at night as a veritable hell ship, the men oil-smeared and grimy moving in the lurid light of trying works flames.



The Sir James Clark Ross, a new type of whaler, which does it all with guns and machinery.

Strange ports on the other side of the world became familiar ports of call for these New England whalers. Some "followed the course about the Cape of Good Hope, made their way eastward through the Indian Ocean, and then either headed south of Australia, which was still known as New Holland, or came into the Pacific through the Straits of Timor. American whaleships were at Zanzibar in 1828; one even visited the Red Sea. They were wont to call at New Zealand, Tasmania, Java, the Moluccas, the Solomon Islands. They touched at Lombok and Bali, went south to Kerguelen Island, discovered the Bonin Islands and sought out Guam, Samoa and the Philippines.

"They threaded their way through the perilous reefs and shoals of countless southern archipelagoes and in search of water and fresh supplies, visited the Marquesas, the Friendly Islands, the Admiralty Islands and the Fijis. To the natives of Polynesia they became as familiar as the China traders seeking out their precious cargoes of sandalwood, beche de mer and tortoise shell. Long before any modern vogue for tropical isles, the whalemen were beguiled by the languorous delights of the South Seas."

A VOYAGE of three years was common, four years not uncommon. The story is told of the captain who was reminded to say good-by to his wife. "But I'll only be gone two years," was his answer. Pent up month after month in the narrow confines of the ship, the men went wild when they finally got shore leave. They debauched the natives of the islands at which they stopped and often turned their simple friendliness into open and menacing hostility.

Hawaii was one of the favorite ports for shore leave. A second and miniature New Bedford had sprung up on Hawaii to serve the whale fishermen in the Pacific. It was completely equipped with hard-fisted merchants, in all the things whalemen needed, and missionaries who sought to convert the natives and restrain the whalers. In the latter endeavor they were notably unsuccessful. A constant feud existed between missionaries and seamen. On one occasion the whalemen held the port in a reign of terror for 24 hours. As Dulles points out, the missionaries never offered the sailors any alternative to the customary debauch.

The whalemen were schooled to adventure and conditioned to the trying out process. What they hated most of all was the tediousness of cruising week after week and month after month, with never a break in the monotony. This strain often wore the nerves of crew and men down to the breaking point, Dulles writes. Officers grew sullen and revengeful, ad-

The Scotch "Sea Serpent" and the Controversy It Has Aroused

MOTION pictures, tracks on the shore, the word of more than 50 witnesses and the opinions of various experts have been mustered to prove that the "sea serpent" or "sea monster," which has been reported from time to time since the days of Pliny, actually exists in the waters of Loch Ness seven miles from here. The 50-foot creature was first reported here last August.

The London Times has received a reel of films which is vouched for by the three operators who took them as showing the denizen of the lake—whether it be cephalopod, mobula, manta, polyp, squid, saurian, cuttlefish, kelpie, kraken, devilfish, oarfish or sea serpent. The films reveal a long, black object similar to a tapering tree trunk but at the thick end there is a rapid and powerful splashing of water indicating the creature is traveling fast. This, it is asserted, proves that the monster is not a log, a figment of the imagination, a publicity stunt or something conjured up by minds under the influence of a "wee drop" and a full moon.

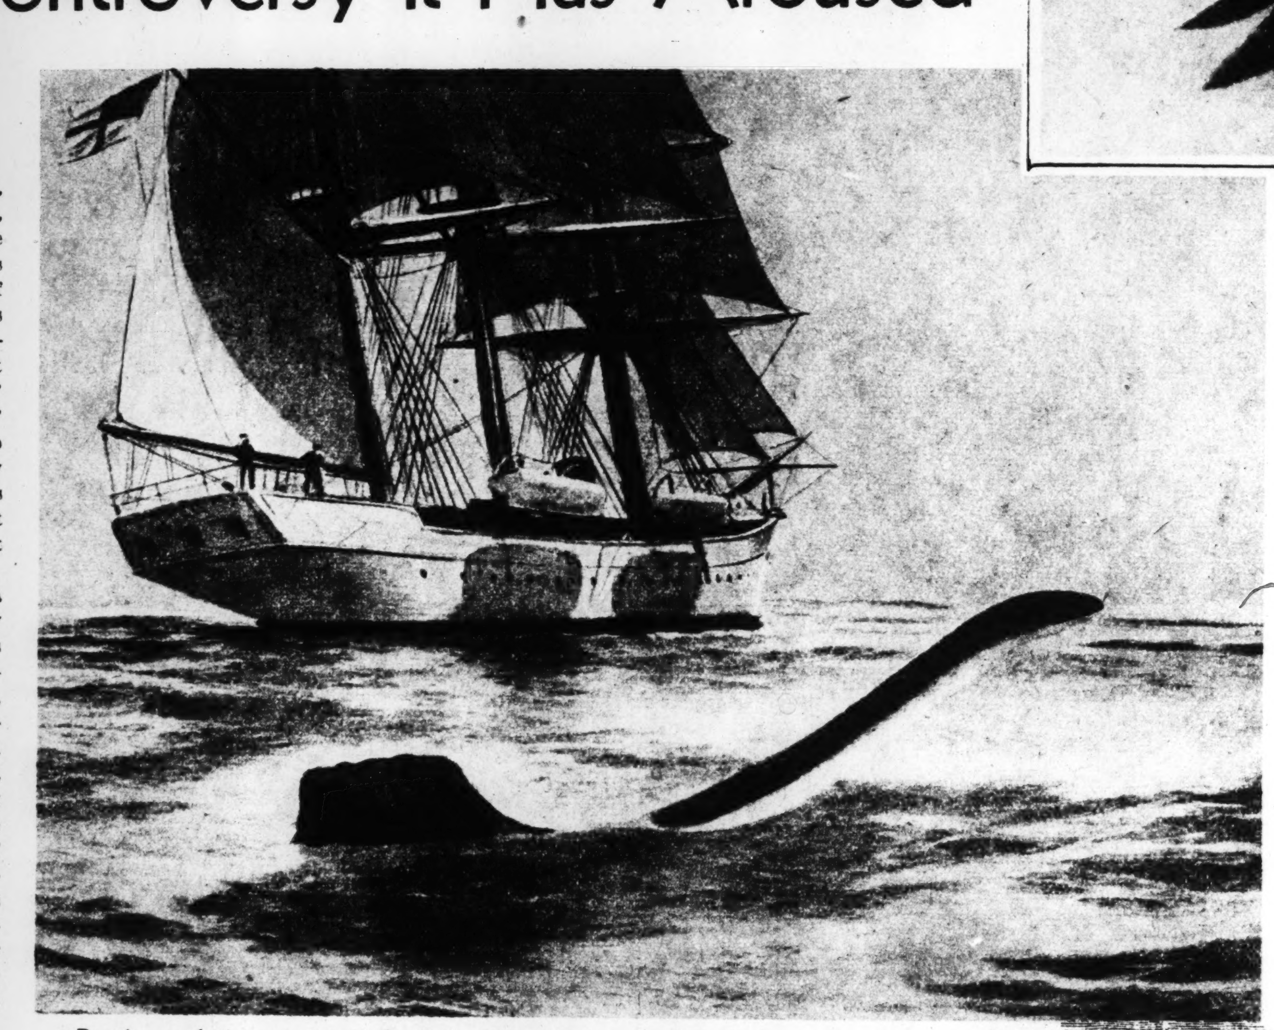
According to the photographers, they were packing up their gear to depart and bemoaning their wasted fortnight when they were attracted by a commotion off the ruins of ancient Urquhart Castle and about a half mile from shore. They leaped into their motorboat and sped toward the place, grinding their cameras and praying for a close-up. The creature however, swam only a short distance and then submerged.

Shortly before this the pontifical London Times made public a report from Lieutenant Commander R. T. Gould (a retired British naval officer of scientific bent and the author of "The Case for the Sea Serpent") which upholds the belief that a sea serpent dwells in the blue-gray waters of Loch Ness. The report is based on a comparison of the testimony of 51 adult and credible persons who assert they saw some kind of an aquatic animal of enormous proportions.

Gould came here a skeptic since he believed that the sea serpent was to be found only in the vastness of the ocean and certainly not in a fresh water lake 23 miles long and a mile wide. After investigating he came to the conclusion that the sea serpent probably entered the lake from the North Sea by swimming for eight miles, like a salmon, up the river against the current.

He resembles a Swedish "monster" of 25 years ago in that he is as much at home in salt water as he is in fresh. The Swedish creature, a denizen of Lake Storsjon, was known commonly as "Storsjoodjuretuppenbarelserna." Despite the honor of this appellation he disappeared without a trace.

The denizen of Loch Ness has been affectionately named Bobby. And since Bobby is credited with having put at least $15,000 into the tills of the canny tradesmen here, the tradesmen have become so interested in him that they have prevailed on the chief high constable of Aberdeenshire to order that no one shall shoot or otherwise molest Bobby. There are some tradesmen who are backing a movement to have Parliament pass a law to protect this hair-and-shekel-raising creature.



Drawing made from a witness' description of a monster seen from the sailing ship Valhalla.

Fifty Witnesses Claim to Have Seen It and the Merchants of Loch Ness—Profiting From the Tourist Trade—Have Asked Parliament to Pass a Law Protecting It From Being Shot.

And among the residents here who vow that Bobby is a sea monster and not a "monster racket"—as some English newspapers hint—is W. U. Goodbody, a member of the Loch Ness Fishery Board.

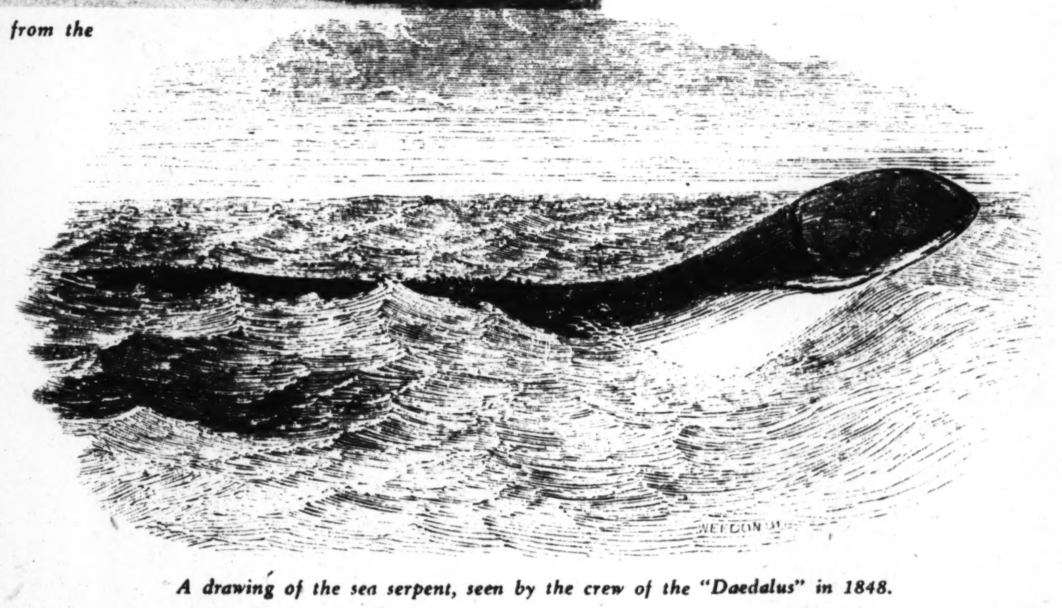
GOODBODY asserted that while motoring with his two daughters he noticed what appeared to be the fins of some huge fish coming toward the shore. When the object was within 400 yards he and his daughters saw that the "fins" were humps. They counted eight or nine humps.

"The creature had a long, thin neck, with a very small head perched much higher than the body," he said. "The part I saw was about 16 feet long. I did not see the tail, as it was under water, but there was a thrashing of the water when the object made a turning movement. It was not like a walrus or a whale or anything I have ever seen in my worldwide travels. I can say for a certainty there is an extraordinary creature in the loch."

M. A. Wetherell, a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and the Zoological Society who has made a name as a hunter of big game in Central Africa, said he had found "a definite spoor of a huge amphibian on the shores of Loch Ness, indicating to him that the creature had "attempted to climb the gravel bank and slipped back."

Then there is the story of the motorist who vows he was driving near the lake one night when "an abomination with a three-arched neck and a body four feet high," hurried across the road ahead of him.

And there is the statement of E. C. Boulenger, director of the Zoological Society's aquarium in London, calling to attention the fact that much of the ocean is unexplored and declaring "the sea serpent should not be hastily dismissed because he has not been actually hooked."



A drawing of the sea serpent, seen by the crew of the "Daedalus" in 1848.

The staid English Quarterly Review printed the following two years before the controversy here: "Let it be said emphatically, now and here, that to a mind that is ready to learn, there is no reason whatever to doubt the occasional, and by no means infrequent, appearance, not only in the great oceans and in the smaller seas, but even estuaries, lochs and fjords, of huge marine monsters, unknown to science and unclassified."

And only a few months ago no less than 15 reputable citizens of all ages and stations in life had told of seeing a sea serpent off Seattle, Wash. To their accounts were added those of two officers of a crack liner — and mercantile officers lay themselves open to professional disadvantages when they enter a sea serpent report in the log. As a result, the majority refuse to face the skepticism that they know awaits them.

Nevertheless, First Mate A. E. Richards of the Santa Lucia, told how just before dawn a "great eel-like monster reared its head like a Scotch terrier struck by curiosity." It was about 90 feet long, he said, and when within 200 feet of the ship it rose out of the water, "with its seven humps like a camel and its face like a cow, and uttered an eerie bellow like a bull whale in its death agony and reared up, perhaps 30 feet, perhaps 50, and flopped over on its back."

By this time, Richards had five searchlights turned on it. Just as it started to dive, Captain W. N. Prengel came on deck and saw enough of it to cause him to remark that it "certainly was the most unusual sea monster I ever saw."

From the austere pages of the wartime logbook of a German submarine comes further substantiation—an account of how a torpedoed ship exploded far under water and cast a gigantic animal, wriggling violently, 50 feet into the air before the eyes of the commander of the U-28 and five of her crew. The monster was described in the log by Baron von Forstner as being 65 feet long, resembling a crocodile, with two legs in front and two behind, all strongly webbed. The Baron and the chief engineer included a drawing of the monster in the log and added that it disappeared 10 or 15 seconds before a picture of it could be taken. In commenting on the Loch Ness creature, the Baron said its description tallied fully with the one seen when the Iberian was sunk near England.

Captain Sir A. H. Rostron, who gained fame when he rescued the Titanic survivors in 1912, accepted whatever onus there may be to having beheld a sea monster by remarking: "There are people who laugh when talking of the sea serpent, but I tell you no one in this world knows what strange creatures live in the depths of the ocean. If I, who spent 46 years of my life at sea, saw in that time only one strange monster, people who have merely made occasional journeys at sea scarcely have a right to laugh at the sea serpent idea."

He saw his monster in 1907 off the coast of Ireland when his attention was attracted to something two miles ahead which answered to the same description as that generally applied to the Loch Ness creature—"a great tree trunk." Soon he could make out its head reared eight feet above the water and darting from side to side "with sudden movements such as you see a blackbird make when hunting worms on the lawn." He saw two protuberances where eyes might have been. Its neck was 12 to 14 feet long and while its body was only partly out of the water an enormous length was indicated. The ears were small. It dived and swam away as it came within the wash of the propellers.

COLONEL T. H. PERKINS, Boston philanthropist and globe trotter of the nineteenth century, was asked by Sir Charles Lyell, English scientist, what he "thought of the sea serpent." Unfortunately I have seen it," replied Perkins. However, he declined to talk about it, valuing his reputation for veracity.

The list of those who have in good faith made statements about the sea monster is a long and imposing one—Aristotle, Aelian, Strabo, Pliny, Olaus Magnus, Bishop of Upsala; Erik Pontoppidan, Bishop of Bergen; Hans Egede, the Greenland missionary, who became a Bishop; Captain McQuhae of H. M. S. Daedalus, who reported to the Lords Commission of the Admiralty in 1848 that he and his crew gazed for 20 minutes on a sea serpent more than 20 feet long; George Drevar, master of the Pauline, who in 1877 declared on oath, with several of his officers, that they had seen a sea serpent coiled around a large sperm whale and "suddenly dragging it headfirst to the bottom;" Lord Crawford, British scientist, who, aboard his yacht off Brazil in 1905, saw a "creature with eel-like neck some six feet long and a brown sail-like fin or frill."

And so it may well be that a species or more than one species of aquatic creature, rare but actual, still exists. And for Bobby of Loch Ness it must be admitted that as described he is an extremely reasonable creature in comparison with monsters the ancients reported as biting ships in two and swallowing men wholesale. Reasonable or unreasonable, he has started a profitable controversy. The photograph of a log which appears here is thought by many to be the only sea monster that has wandered into Loch Ness.

COLUMBUS, Ohio.

WHEN the voice of Mme. Lucrezia Bori ripples through the auditorium of the Metropolitan Opera House, most of the audience is content merely to enjoy it, to experience unanalytically the pleasure created by such beauty of sound. But certain auditors, persons specially concerned with the technique of singing, or incurably scientific in their attitude toward the arts as well as more prosaic aspects of life, must be intensely curious as to how the prima donna achieves her effects—what mechanical processes are responsible for her voice.

To a considerable degree, this curiosity may now be satisfied. The hidden vocal machinery of Mme. Bori has been photographed in action, the pictures revealing the positions assumed by the parts of this machinery in mouth and throat when the various notes come forth. And these views of what takes place behind the lips of a great soprano when she sings upset some of the long-cherished theories of voice teachers.

The pictures were made with X-ray photography by Dr. G. Oscar Russell, director of the Speech, Voice Science and Hearing Research Laboratories at Ohio State University here. He did the work under the sponsorship of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

By means of ingenious apparatus the photographs were made with Mme. Bori standing at ease and singing naturally, freed from the restrictions on normal tone production which have attended earlier experimentation of this kind.

THE exposure time for the photographs was reduced to one-one hundred-and-twentieth of a second, which made it unnecessary for the singer to hold a note longer than called for by the score. There was an arrangement which caused the photographs to be taken automatically, plates being exposed by certain sounds from the singer. That is, the timing device was set in advance so that it would be sprung and the exposure made when a particular vowel or note was sung. Mme. Bori would sing an aria and when she reached a predetermined tone, her voice would set in motion the process which resulted in a photograph showing the interior of her mouth and throat at that instant. It might be said that her singing thus photographed itself. And there was no interruption of, or impediment to, natural singing.

Sound records were made in synchronization with X-ray pictures. These were helpful in making an accurate analysis of the photographs. By referring to the records, Dr. Russell could ascertain the exact shadings of sound that accompanied each picture. Synchronized oscillographic records also were made. The oscillography records the rapidity of sound vibrations, thus providing a mechanically accurate measure of pitch, for the pitch of a tone is determined by the number of vibrations, or cycles, a second.

The study of Mme. Bori's voice covers a wide range of pitches, vowels and voice qualities. The singer even produced deliberately a "tight" tone, anathema to a first-rank vocalist. It took much persuasion to induce her to do that.

In reaching conclusions from study of the laboratory tests, Dr. Russell refrains from sweeping generalizations. This investigation deals with one singer, and he apparently feels that the fact that she produces an excellent tone in a certain way does not mean someone else could not produce it in another way. But he does point out that in several particulars the results of the experiment seem to contradict widely accepted

SEEING the VOCAL MACHINERY of an OPERA STAR in ACTION

COLUMBUS, Ohio.

WHEN the voice of Mme. Lucrezia Bori ripples through the auditorium of the Metropolitan Opera House, most of the audience is content merely to enjoy it, to experience unanalytically the pleasure created by such beauty of sound. But certain auditors, persons specially concerned with the technique of singing, or incurably scientific in their attitude toward the arts as well as more prosaic aspects of life, must be intensely curious as to how the prima donna achieves her effects—what mechanical processes are responsible for her voice.

To a considerable degree, this curiosity may now be satisfied. The hidden vocal machinery of Mme. Bori has been photographed in action, the pictures revealing the positions assumed by the parts of this machinery in mouth and throat when the various notes come forth. And these views of what takes place behind the lips of a great soprano when she sings upset some of the long-cherished theories of voice teachers.

The pictures were made with X-ray photography by Dr. G. Oscar Russell, director of the Speech, Voice Science and Hearing Research Laboratories at Ohio State University here. He did the work under the sponsorship of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

By means of ingenious apparatus, the photographs were made with Mme. Bori standing at ease and singing naturally, freed from the restrictions on normal tone production which have attended earlier experimentation of this kind.

THE exposure time for the photographs was reduced to one-one-hundred-and-twentieth of a second, which made it unnecessary for the singer to hold a note longer than called for by the score. There was an arrangement which caused the photographs to be taken automatically, plates being exposed by certain sounds from the singer. That is, the timing device was set in advance so that it would be sprung and the exposure made when a particular vowel or note was sung. Mme. Bori would sing an aria and when she reached a predetermined tone, her voice would set in motion the process which resulted in a photograph showing the interior of her mouth and throat at that instant. It might be said that her singing thus photographed itself. And there was no interruption of, or impediment to, natural singing.

Sound records were made in synchronization with X-ray pictures. These were helpful in making an accurate analysis of the photographs. By referring to the records, Dr. Russell could ascertain the exact shadings of sound that accompanied each picture. Synchronized oscillographic records also were made. The oscillography records the rapidity of sound vibrations, thus providing a mechanically accurate measure of pitch, for the pitch of a tone is determined by the number of vibrations, or cycles, a second.

The study of Mme. Bori's voice covers a wide range of pitches, vowels and voice qualities. The singer even produced deliberately a "tight" tone, anathema to a first-rank vocalist. It took much persuasion to induce her to do that.

In reaching conclusions from study of the laboratory tests, Dr. Russell refrains from sweeping generalizations. This investigation deals with one singer, and he apparently feels that the fact that she produces an excellent tone in a certain way does not mean someone else could not produce it in another way. But he does point out that in several particulars the results of the experiment seem to contradict widely accepted theories concerning the technique of singing. That is, the way in which this one singer's vocal machinery operates in achieving certain results is different from the way in which, according to theory, such machinery must work to attain these ends.

For one thing, some voice teachers say the tip of the tongue should always rest against the lower teeth. But Mme. Bori's does not. Another theory was that a "tight" tone results when the tongue gets into the back of the throat, but Mme. Bori sang lovely "ahs" with the tongue in that position.

Another theory which probably requires modification now is that nasal resonance accounts for differences in voice quality. The X-ray pictures indicate that when Mme. Bori is singing the velum, or aperture into the nose, is always closed, and, as Dr. Russell says, "Except for the relatively small amount of sound energy which could be transmitted through the walls themselves, it may therefore be said that nasal resonance is not made use of."

A further observation concerns the position of the larynx. It has been commonly believed that the larynx rose on high pitches and fell on low ones, but this was not true of this operatic star. Neither was it true, as sometimes maintained, that the larynx remained in a constant position anchored to the spinal column, for it changed its position frequently as she sang.

Discussing more fully some of these matters, Dr. Russell says:

"Another moot question was the one as to whether the velum or aperture into the nose should be opened or closed. As a scientist, I am not concerned with the problem as to whether it should be or not; all I can say is that in all of these X-ray photographs of Mme. Bori, the velar passage is closed. However, the velum is not always up, nor does the uvula always take identically the same position. Sometimes it is up, and sometimes down, sometimes relaxed and sometimes tensed. There may be some significance in the reasons why and when such changed position is used. To some, this observation may be strange for other reasons, because the opening into the nose was thought to close when the velum went up, and open when it came down.

However, that is not true, as has been repeatedly proven, especially within the last few years. The velar opening into the nose is closed through a sphincter-like action and the movement accomplishing the same is rather from front to back than from bottom to top.

"Another question on which these X-rays throw considerable light is one which concerns the theories of some voice teachers who have insisted that the tip of the tongue should always rest against the lower teeth. Madame Bori's does not do so. As a matter of fact, the position of the tongue tip appears to be primarily dependent upon the consonants which precede and follow the vowel. It does not appear that the voice quality is in any wise changed by reason of any such changes.

"Perhaps the most significant observation is that which concerns the question as to what happens when the tongue 'gets into the back of the throat.' It will be observed from all the X-rays taken from an innumerable number of 'ahs,' that whenever the quality is unmistakably that of this vowel, the back of the tongue always 'gets into the back of the throat.' That seems to be necessary in order to produce a clear and unmistakable vowel. That is, the opening between the tongue and the throat down in the neighborhood of the tip of the epiglotis gets very small in even the best of singers. That opening, as a matter of fact, is for 'ah' hardly of greater diameter from front to back than that of my pencil.

"Heretofore, such a position would have been said to be characteristic of 'tight' tones. Madame Bori was very averse to even attempting a tight tone. Nevertheless, she finally consented and produced such a tone for us on an excessively high note, being the third E above middle C. It will be seen that the throat opening for such a tight tone is if anything smaller than for a full, rich, well-produced tone on 'ah.'

And as will be seen, the 'tight' quality is obviously created by reason of a constriction in the whole superior laryngeal area. The natural tendency of such excessive tightening and reduction of the openings through which the tone can escape would be to accentuate the high partials. As I have previously pointed out, the vocal cords are also forced to clash together, thus producing a very 'metallic' tone of much the same type as produced by cymbals.

"I MAY say that these X-rays do not show that a raising of the pitch is accomplished by stretching the vocal cords. We will therefore obviously have to modify our previously held concepts on even this fundamental subject."

In trying to determine the causes of difference in voice quality, Dr. Russell for several years has been taking motion pictures and X-ray photographs of processes involved in singing. A number of famous opera stars have co-operated with him by allowing themselves to be used as laboratory subjects. The study of Madame Bori is considered particularly successful, partly because it was conducted with improved apparatus, which the investigator and his assistants spent two years in perfecting. In addition, this singer, as Dr. Russell reports, "was a most co-operative and willing subject; therefore, the X-rays for her production were very much superior to those of many another opera star, some of whom showed so much of the traditional artist's temperament that their X-rays did not turn out well."

Madame Bori first sang with the Metropolitan Opera more than 20 years ago.

Offering a Grand Duke Money for a Boost Up the Social Ladder

Alfred Lowenstein, the Powerful Belgian Capitalist, Wanted Alexander to Aid Him in Getting a Title—and What the Russian Did About It—Told in This, the Fourth Installment of 'Always a Grand Duke.'

Alfred Lowenstein.

Grand Duke Alexander of Russia has already told for Post-Dispatch readers in "Once a Grand Duke" the story of his life, up to and including the World War and the Russian revolution. His present narrative, "Always a Grand Duke," completed just before he died recently, began with his escape from Russia, and his arrival in Paris. Now the former Russian dignitary, once a player in world affairs, becomes a spectator.

In succeeding installments he will give a series of brilliant pictures of a gay, mad world in which he made his way by his undoubted intelligence and by his keen knowledge of human nature.

This is the fourth installment.

By ALEXANDER ROMANOFF

Former Grand Duke of Russia

IT WAS in the early part of 1926 that I first met Alfred Lowenstein, the financier. My telephone rang and a deep, resonant voice said:

"I am speaking on behalf of Mr. Alfred Lowenstein."

"Yes," I returned, and the voice added:

"Mr. Alfred Lowenstein of Brussels."

"Yes," I repeated, and immediately thought of the gold-and-platinum automobile, the size of a trolley car, which I had often seen parked in front of the Ritz, with its two equally glittering chauffeurs always eager to explain to the passers-by that this monstrosity belonged to Mr. Lowenstein of Paris.

"My patron would like to see you on a matter of great importance and utmost urgency," explained the representative of the man whose fabulous wealth, according to European gossip, favorably compared with that of King Midas or John D. Rockefeller Jr.

I felt flattered, though somewhat surprised. It was nice of Mr. Lowenstein to wish to see me, and I did not doubt that the subjects occupying his mind must perforce be "great" and "utmost" in their ponderousness—but what on earth could I do for the Napoleon of European after-war promoters?

Despite my doubts I agreed to meet Mr. Lowenstein, which seemed to please his representative considerably.

"Thanks a lot," he said. "My patron will be certain to appreciate your courtesy. I shall have our car waiting at your address tomorrow at 2 p. m. sharp."

"Don't do that!" I exclaimed spontaneously, shuddering at the thought of riding through the streets of Paris in Mr. Lowenstein's platinum-hooded monster. "I'd much rather come by myself."

"But it is nearly 12 miles from Paris to Le Bourget."

"Why Le Bourget? Do you mean the airdrome of Le Bourget?"

"Exactly. That's where one of Mr. Lowenstein's airplanes will be waiting for you."

"Are you joking? Or is your patron in the habit of holding his conferences at a certain altitude?"

"Not quite; but don't you see, he shan't know till tomorrow whether he will receive you in his house in Brussels or in his villa in Biarritz. In either case, our pilots will see to it that you have a nice and comfortable voyage."

He added something pertaining to the type of motors "exclusively" employed by Mr. Lowenstein's air fleet and hung up while I was still searching for adequate words to express my amazement.

I swore. Both he and his master must have borrowed their conference manner from the heroes of the Hollywood films. The only logical thing for me to do was to ignore the entire occurrence and not to answer my doorbell the next afternoon. But fate willed otherwise. It so happened that wherever I went that day I always collided with Mr. Lowenstein's name. It glared at me from the headlines of the papers, which described his "noble deed" of granting a 100,000,000-franc loan to the Government of Belgium, and the mammoth posters pasted on the walls along the Grand Boulevards were expressing hope that this "glorious example" would inspire the patriotic zeal of the French financiers. My curiosity aroused, I decided to call on Mr. Lowenstein.

The pilots—three of them—met me at the entrance gates of Le Bourget. It appeared that Mr. Lowenstein wanted me to choose between a Handley-Page, a Fokker, a Voisin, a . . .

"Now, wait, wait," I interrupted, my eyes still hurting from looking at too much gold and platinum inside the monster car. "Don't you think it is for you men to decide as to which one of your planes is in better shape?"

They looked pained, almost indignant.

"What we meant," said a tall dictatorial Englishman, "is that in case you have some writing or dictation to do en route, you would be more comfortable in the Fokker, as it contains a fully equipped office. On the other hand, if you are interested to view the panorama, you should take the two-seater Voisin."

The choice between dictation and panorama settled in favor of the latter. I inquired whether I would be permitted to learn as to where we were going.

"Is it Brussels or Biarritz?"

"I have sealed orders," explained the Englishman. "The pilot in charge will open them at the altitude of 2000 feet, as usual."

We took off in an atmosphere charged with secrecy and much whispering between the employes of Le Bourget. The pilot in charge asked me whether I had ever flown before and I understood that my identity remained undisclosed to him and his comrades. When the altitude of 2000 feet was reached by us, he tore open a large sealed envelope and passed to me a thick sheet of water-marked paper. It read "Biarritz," and was signed with just one letter, "L." I felt relieved: the pleasure of spending a few hours in Biarritz was well worth going through this ludicrous comedy.

I expected that we would land at Bayonne, it being the only town possessing an airdrome in the extreme southwest of France, but I underestimated Mr. Lowenstein's vast possibilities. Having flown some 350 miles, we came down on a spacious landing directly adjoining what Mr. Lowenstein called his "little week-end place," but what looked to me like the largest country house this side of Suez.

Another voyage, this time through an enfilade of glittering rooms and past monumental butlers, and I was ushered into the presence of Alfred Lowenstein. He stood behind a surprisingly small desk in his study, an unprepossessing man in his middle forties, dressed in heavy English tweeds and conveying an impression of extreme nervousness and restlessness. I noticed how his face twitched when he made an attempt at a welcoming smile, and this did not seem to fit into my preconceived picture of a boisterous newly rich. Nothing in his appearance suggested that subconscious arrogance of huge wealth which is so peculiar both to Wall Street operators and to European war profiteers. He could easily have passed for a small German merchant on a holiday, but his French sounded unmistakably Belgian.

It was the French of a man who had begun to pay attention to grammar late in life.

"Hate to cause you all this trouble," he said rapidly, swallowing most of the words and leaving the endings of his phrases to my imagination, "but you see . . . It's like this . . . The day before yesterday . . . Or was it last week? No, it was the day before yesterday, I heard wonderful things about you, marvelous things. Do you know who is your greatest friend? Who loves you? Who would like to help you?"

No, I did not know anyone of that description. I wish I did.

He laughed and waved his hands.

"Don't blame you . . . Not for a second . . . Bitter bread of exile . . . Memories of the past . . . Most damnable situation of all . . . But that's all in the past. Now, I am what I am."

He lowered his voice, looked me straight in the eyes, and said briskly: "I want a title and a position in international society."

My recent experiences had considerably diminished my capacity for registering surprise, but I was taken aback by this newest development in my career.

"A title and a position in international society," I repeated automatically, "and that's what made you bring me to Biarritz. But why call on me? I do not distribute titles and I have never been much of a society leader. What can I do?"

"A lot. Help me to break the social barriers in Paris and in London and I myself shall take care of the rest. Here is the list of people I want to be my week-end guests. Should I succeed in getting them here, I am established with everybody and I'll have no difficulty in getting a title from my own Government!"

I looked at the list. It read like a condensed edition of the Almanach de Gotha. No one lower than a Viscount was permitted to enter the ranks of Mr. Lowenstein's prospective week-end guests.

"Very nice names," I complimented my host.

"First class. This list has been compiled by two senior diplomats in the Foreign Office. Now then, let's talk business."

"Business?"

"Yes. I stand ready to pay you $2000 a week for a period of five years."

"In return for which I am expected to do what?"

HE TOOK a sheet of paper from the desk and passed it to me. Then he threw himself back in his chair and lighted a cigar. He looked as if he felt that his job was done and that mine was about to commence.

"What is it? An invitation?" I asked, seeing that the opening phrase requested "the pleasure of ——'s presence at a garden party to be given," etc.

"How do you like the signature?"

"The signature?"

I inspected it and gasped. It read: "Alfred Lowenstein, per Alexander the Grand Duke of Russia!"

"And that is all I expect of you," he said, puffing his enormous black cigar. "Just sign my invitations! Not much of a job, considering the salary I am willing to pay, now, is it?"

So sincere was he in his fascinating ignorance, so instructive was it to watch that recognized financial genius of Europe disclose both his contempt and his adoration for a society founded before his days, that it would have been utterly childish on my part to create a scene or attempt to chasten him. I laughed my first good laugh since 1914 and we parted good friends. I promised to keep in touch with his progress toward the royal inclosure; he, on the other hand, felt convinced that I would reconsider my foolish decision not to accept his magnificent offer.

"You'll hear from me very soon," he said as we were shaking hands in front of the silver-winged Voisin. "I give you two weeks to think it over, but then I'll have to take my next best bet."

His "next best bet" turned out to be a young French Duke, bearer of one of the oldest names in the world and a nephew of a popular reigning King to boot. It seems that the young man's parents, enraged by his escapades, had cut down his allowance, and he retaliated my accepting Mr. Lowenstein's offer.

I would never have believed such a thing could actually occur, but there was an invitation to the selfsame greatly discussed week-end party in Biarritz lying on my desk and signed "Alfred Lowenstein, per the Duke de ——." Attached to it was a short note: "I suppose you will be sorry now," wrote my magnanimous friend, "particularly if I tell you that I got this youngster for a fourth as much as I was willing to pay you."

I did not attend the famous week-end party, but almost every one of my friends did. The advance guard of the First Crusade could not have boasted of finer names. The list of the titled men and women who answered the call issued by the young Duke may have been mistaken for a roster of the descendants of the First Crusaders gathered in convention in a villa at Biarritz.

EL PASO, Texas.

THE United States and Mexico are about to begin one of the greatest co-operative engineering projects ever undertaken by two nations. They are joining forces and finances to straighten out the Rio Grande, the water boundary over which they once fought a war. The Public Works Administration has just allotted $2,800,000 for the first year's work on the American side and the Mexican Government has set aside 400,000 pesos for preliminary work on the south bank. Mexican workers already are in the field at Juarez, across the river from El Paso, and the American work is expected to start within a month or two.

A five year program of construction, dredging and filling work is in view and business on both sides of the border is jubilant at the prospects offered. It will mean the employment of somewhere around 1000 men throughout the five years and a total expenditure of more than $6,000,000. The river work will consist mainly of straightening out the kinks and curves of the crooked stream and reclaiming much tillable land on both banks. As another result, of course, the river will be shortened. The river distance between El Paso and Fort Quitman, for example, will be cut down from 155 miles to 88. That gives some idea of the number of curves to be ironed out.

Besides this, the program calls for the construction of a great dam at Caballo, New Mexico, 100 miles upstream from El Paso. This will impound 100,000 acre feet of water—that is, water enough to cover 100,000 acres one foot deep. Its estimated cost of $1,500,000 is included in the $6,000,000 total for the whole program. It is designed mainly to supplement the river control of the Elephant Butte dam, 22 miles farther north, and surveys are now being made with a view to hydro-electric development at both places.

Plans for this program were formulated co-operatively by the American and Mexican sections of the International Boundary Commission, a body set up for the purpose of settling boundary disputes which frequently arise as a result of the Rio Grande's habit of shifting its course and annexing Mexican land to the United States or vice versa. The American Government will defray 88 per cent of the expense of the undertaking and Mexico 12 per cent, the respective quotas being fixed according to the property values affected by the work. More than $1,000,000 of the total amount will be spent for right of way on the American side so that the government engineers can carry on their work of channel straightening without interference from private property owners. When the work is completed, the government will then auction off the land that is not needed.

As the plans stand now, a total of 165,000 acres in the two countries will be affected by the improvements and 3460 acres will actually change hands. That is, 3460 acres will be cut off from this country and added to Mexico and a similar amount will be taken from Mexico in other places. More than 4,500,000 cubic yards of new river channel will be dredged out and more than 8,000,000 cubic yards of levees and embankments will be thrown up. Between these will be a floodway, 500 feet wide with a capacity of 11,000 second-feet of water. The El Paso headquarters of the boundary commission will also have charge of a $400,000 co-operative flood control project at Nogales, Arizona, on the Santa Cruz river, and of a $1,500,000 control project on the lower Rio Grande, both of which undertakings are separate from that of the Rio

PUTTING the RIO GRANDE IN ITS PLACE

That gives some idea of the number of curves to be ironed out.

Besides this, the program calls for the construction of a great dam at Caballo, New Mexico, 100 miles upstream from El Paso. This will impound 100,000 acre feet of water—that is, water enough to cover 100,000 acres one foot deep. Its estimated cost of $1,500,000 is included in the $6,000,000 total for the whole program. It is designed mainly to supplement the river control of the Elephant Butte dam, 22 miles farther north, and surveys are now being made with a view to hydro-electric development at both places.

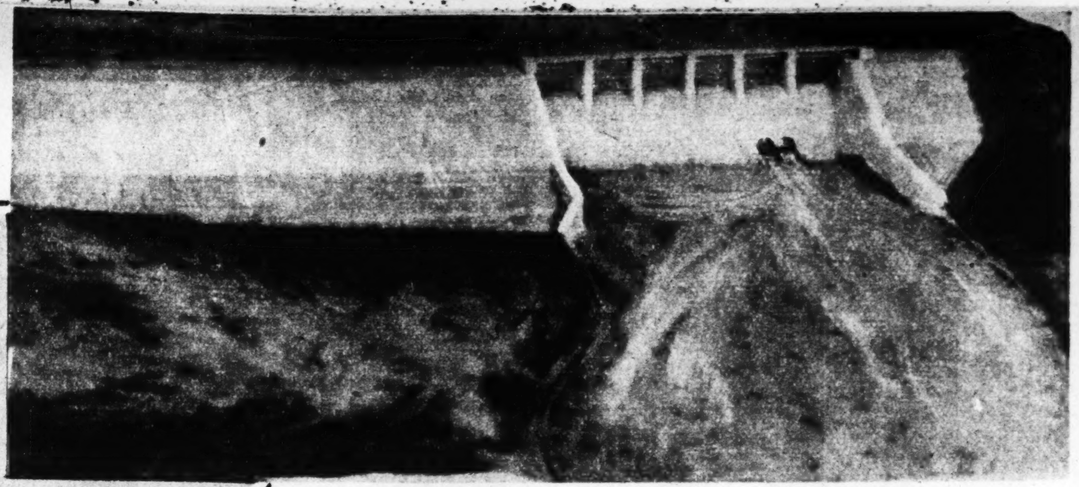
Flood on the Rio Grande, a last summer's scene near El Paso.

Plans for this program were formulated co-operatively by the American and Mexican sections of the International Boundary Commission, a body set up for the purpose of settling boundary disputes which frequently arise as a result of the Rio Grande's habit of shifting its course and annexing Mexican land to the United States or vice versa. The American Government will defray 88 per cent of the expense of the undertaking and Mexico 12 per cent, the respective quotas being fixed according to the property values affected by the work. More than $1,000,000 of the total amount will be spent for right of way on the American side so that the government engineers can carry on their work of channel straightening without interference from private property owners. When the work is completed, the government will then auction off the land that is not needed.

As the plans stand now, a total of [illegible] acres in the two countries will be affected by the improvements and 3460 acres will actually change hands. That is, 3460 acres will be cut off from this country and added to Mexico and a similar amount will be taken from Mexico in other places. More than 4,500,000 cubic yards of new river channel will be dredged out and more than 8,000,000 cubic yards of levees and embankments will be thrown up. Between these will be a floodway, 500 feet wide with a capacity of 11,[illegible] second-feet of water. The El Paso headquarters of the boundary commission will also have charge of a $400,000 co-operative flood control project at Nogales, Arizona, on the Santa Cruz river, and of a $1,500,000 control project on the lower Rio Grande, both of which undertakings are separate from that of the Rio Grande straightening project.

Flood control, however, is one of the major features of this program. Property values of more than $100,000,000 in the El Paso and Juarez districts — districts where floods have done great damage in the past—will be insured by the new Rio Grande levees against such ravages in the future.

BUT the main objective is to chain the troublesome Rio Grande to its bed and thereby stop those ownership disputes which are constantly arising. The work does not clear up the famous Chamizal dispute over the ownership of valuable city property in El Paso. This tract of water-front property which lies directly across the river from downtown Juarez and which Mexico claims, will have to be disposed of through other agencies, but the river improvement work will eliminate hundreds of bancos, those small corners and strips of property so often shifted from one side of the river to the other with consequent change of the international boundary and ensuing disagreement over ownership.



Model of the proposed Caballo Dam.

When Men Fought Whales in the Open Sea

administering severe punishments, such as whipping with a rope's end, for minor infractions. The men in their turn brooded over their wrongs, and sometimes mutiny resulted. Bloody mutinies occurred on the Globe and the Junior, both out of New Bedford.

Profits during the boom period in whaling were often very high. A Pacific sperm whaler of 350 tons burden was capable of carrying 2400 barrels of oil, and this, with the whalebone, another source of profit, might yield as high as $56,000, representing a profit of about 100 per cent on the original investment, over a four-year period, to be divided among owners and crew.

The discovery of oil at Titusville, Pennsylvania, meant the end of this flourishing industry. It had had a number of crippling blows. The Civil War resulted in the destruction of a number of ships. And a disastrous year in the Arctic ice pack caused the loss of more than 20 ships. But the old-timers stubbornly persisted in their belief that the trade in whales would continue. Kerosene, they said, would never give so good a light as whale oil.

The disintegration of the whaling fleet was very rapid, decreasing from 263 vessels in 1866 to 124 in 1886, and falling away to 42 in another two decades. By 1920, the author records, there were only two old-time whaling ships along the New England coast. Then the Wanderer was wrecked and not long afterward the Charles W. Morgan was beached at New Bedford as a museum.

THE only whaling that is done today is done by large motor ships that are really floating factories. One of these, the Sir James Clark Ross, was described in the Sunday Magazine of the Post-Dispatch two years ago. And even floating whale factories such as these—there are only three or four of them—are finding it difficult to track down enough whales to make it a profitable business. It is the close of an industry that had a lusty part in America's growth.

classes of vertebrate animals. In the lowest fishes it is represented by an open gland discharging its secretion directly into the throat. Some authorities believe it plays an even more important part as a regulator of development in lower animals than it does in man. At any rate, its weight in comparison with that of the whole brain is greater.

In the human adult, the pituitary, more accurately called the hypophysis, is situated almost exactly in the center of the head, being suspended from the under side of the brain. It is protected in a recess in one of the bones that make up the skull. It consists of two lobes, the anterior and posterior, and in adults its weight is about 10 grains. Dr. R. G. Hoskins, research associate in physiology in the medical school of Harvard University, devotes considerable space to discussion of the pituitary gland in his "Tides of Life—The Endocrine Glands in Bodily Adjustment," published last year by W. H. Norton & Co., New York.

"When examined under the microscope," he writes, "the anterior and posterior lobes are seen to be quite dissimilar. The anterior lobe is made up of glandular cells that are permeated by enlarged capillaries, the sinusoidal blood spaces. The component cells fall into two types. One series stain deeply upon the application of dyes, hence are called chromophile (color loving). Another group that do not stain readily are known as the chromophobe (color fearing) cells. The function of these latter is not known.

"OF THE chromophile cells there are, in turn, two types, one of which has an affinity for acid stains, hence is called acidophilic. It is this group that presumably secretes the growth hormone. Those of a second type, the basophilic, have special affinity for alkaline stains and are believed to furnish a sex-stimulating hormone. The evidence on these points is chiefly that bodily overgrowth is associated with unusual prominence of the acidophilic cells, whereas sex anomalies are associated with changes in basophilic cells."

After description of pituitary feeding and injection experiments conducted at Harvard and Columbia universities, experiments which were for the most part inconclusive, Dr. Hoskins writes as follows:

"A new face has been put upon the situation by observations made in the laboratory of Professor Herbert Evans at the University of California, where for more than a decade a leading part has been taken in the study of pituitary extracts. In 1921, Evans and Long were able to show that simple watery extracts of the anterior pituitary glands of oxen, injected into rats, consistenly resulted in more rapid growth than was manifested by their untreated litter mates. An interference in the reproductive processes was also noted, an observation that foreshadowed numerous intensive investigations now taking place both here and abroad. Evans and Long later improved their extract by various technical refinements. The method more recently followed is to collect the pituitaries of oxen immediately after slaughter, trim off all but the anterior lobes and subject these to the sterilizing action of 70 per cent alcohol. The tissue is then ground in a mortar and extracted overnight on ice, with weak sodium hydroxide solution and then neutralized with weak acetic acid."

What Happens to the Baby Stars

close of the New York show.

It was a changed, almost unrecognizable movie industry which Miss Evans encountered when she appeared before the cameras and microphones as Ramon Navarro's leading lady in "Son of India." The "mike" bothered her at first, but as the "rushes" proved day after day that she need fear nothing, her nervousness disappeared.

Critics and public alike acclaimed her when she made her appearance in this production, it being the first time that a child star's attempted comeback had been approved by either.

"Sporting Blood" and "Guilty Hands" were her next two movies. Then came a long succession of important roles, each one bringing an increasing number of fans to the actress' camp. And in her most recent picture, "Free, White and Desperate," in which she appears opposite Robert Montgomery, she proves very conclusively that she is a finished actress.

It's a precarious business, this being a child star. So far the odds have been about 50 to 1 against prolonged success. But then, who knows who will be the fortunate one out of the next 50?

This week's star is Ruby Keeler. The three sets of costumes shown here were worn by her in these roles in the following movies:

HICKORY HOLLOW FOLKS

And the Things They Do

By WALTER QUERMANN

HORSEWHIPPED

THE CHARACTERS

When Hokus Pokus got tired of plodding through the snow, as he was traveling to Hickory Hollow, he took off his hat and said some magic words over it, and out jumped a pony which he then rode. When he arrived at the O'Possum Tavern he dismounted and decided to go in and, having no more use for the pony, he made him disappear back into his hat. Tom and Pat O'Possum, who were watching from an upstairs window and were amazed, wondered if the pony really went into the hat. They decide to investigate as

THE PLAY BEGINS

TOM O'POSSUM—(Softly.) S-h-h-h. Do you think that stick is strong enough to lift a pony?

PAT O'POSSUM—(Whispering.) Not so loud. We'll find out in a moment. Here it comes. (And so it does, the hat on the end of the stick. They hastily snatch it off and run away with it as fast as they can go.)

PAT O'POSSUM—Gosh, it's as light as a feather.

TOM O'POSSUM—Let's go to the other side of this hill and get the pony out, and then we can put the hat back and that old goose will never be any wiser. (And so they run to the other side of the hill, not knowing that Hokus Pokus, who has watched every move they have made out of the corner of his eye, is following them. They have scarcely put the hat down when Hokus Pokus sticks his head over the top of the hill.)

HOKUS POKUS—(Watching them make passes over his hat.) So that's it. Hm-m-m. I suppose they mean no harm, but I'm going to teach them to let other folks' things alone. (He waves his wand and yells a magic word and out springs a night mare who grabs the twins and gives them a sound whipping. Hokus Pokus picks up his hat and, placing it on his head, returns to finish his breakfast.)

HOKUS POKUS—Hm-m-m. Folks amuse me. They all seem to think that it's the hat that does the tricks. They would soon forget that nonsense if they knew that I came from a magic family. My great, great, great grandmother broke into print years ago when she layed a golden egg. Hm-m-m. If I could do that trick I'd bring back prosperity. Ha! ha! ha!

HOW GRANT WOOD MADE A BOOK COVER

The internationally known Iowa painter was commissioned to do a jacket design for Vardis Fisher's new novel about a double personality. In order to be accurate in merging two aspects of the same face, he had a student sculptor make the two busts shown at top; these were split and joined together as shown above, and painted as reproduced below.

DAN, I SIMPLY CAN'T BEAR TO SEE YOU THIS WAY. ITS REALLY GETTING SERIOUS.
ON THE WAY TO THE OFFICE
MY DEAR, HAVE YOU SEEN DAN BARKER LATELY? THEY SAY HE HASN'T BEEN ABLE TO GET A DECENT NIGHT'S SLEEP IN WEEKS--LOOKS MORE LIKE HELEN'S FATHER THAN HER HUSBAND.
I KNOW---HE'S CHANGED TERRIBLY. I DON'T SEE HOW SHE STANDS IT---- SHE'S STAYED SO YOUNG AND HAS SUCH LOADS OF PEP HERSELF.
GOOD GRIEF! THEY MEAN ME!
THAT NIGHT
THERE'S NO USE FOOLING MYSELF ANY LONGER. I'M NOT ONLY A TOTAL LOSS AT THE OFFICE---BUT IT'S EVEN GOTTEN TO THE POINT WHERE PEOPLE ARE FEELING SORRY FOR YOU.
WHY, HONEY---YOU HAVEN'T HEARD ANY COMPLAINTS FROM ME, HAVE YOU?
YOU'RE A BRICK, HELEN---- AND ALWAYS WERE. BUT THINGS CAN'T GO ON LIKE THIS.
I'M GOING TO TALK TO LAURA TYLER THE FIRST THING TOMORROW. SHE'S SURE TO KNOW SOMETHING TO DO.
---AND YOU SAY ALL I NEED TO DO IS GIVE HIM A CUP OF OVALTINE MIXED WITH WARM MILK JUST BEFORE HE GOES TO BED AT NIGHT?
THAT'S IT---OVALTINE--- THE SWISS FOOD-DRINK. IT NEARLY ALWAYS WORKS LIKE A CHARM--AND, BEST OF ALL, IT'S ABSOLUTELY DRUGLESS-THAT'S WHY WE LIKE TO RECOMMEND IT.
OVALTINE, PLEASE!
THAT NIGHT
SAY, HELEN, THIS CERTAINLY TASTES GREAT. WHAT DID YOU SAY IT WAS?
IT'S OVALTINE--AND LAURA TYLER SAYS IT WILL MAKE YOU SLEEP LIKE A 2-YEAR-OLD--SO NOW HURRY ALONG TO BED.
WELL-LOOK AT THAT! ASLEEP ALREADY.
NEXT MORNING
BOY, DID I SLEEP LAST NIGHT! AND JUST WAIT TILL I GET DOWN TO THAT OFFICE! I'LL CERTAINLY SHOW THEM!
WHY, DAN! YOU LOOK LIKE A DIFFERENT PERSON---ACTUALLY!
A FEW NIGHTS LATER
HONEY, YOU CERTAINLY DESERVE A MILLION DOLLARS FOR FINDING OUT ABOUT OVALTINE.
HAVING YOU LIKE YOURSELF AGAIN IS REWARD ENOUGH FOR ME!

How Ovaltine Brings

SOUND SLEEP QUICKLY

And Does It Entirely Without Drugs

No More Night-time Tossing —New Energy Next Day

OVALTINE is a scientific food concentrate approved by more than 20,000 physicians—and widely used in 54 different countries today.

Taken with warm milk just before bedtime, it not only brings sound sleep quickly—but also acts to rebuild your worn-out body, nerve and brain cells while you sleep. And greatly increases your ability to recuperate from fatigue. As a result, your come-back is much faster—your nerves steadier by far.

Briefly, Ovaltine acts 3 ways to combat the 3 causes of sleepless nights and the vitality-loss that inevitably follows as a result:

First: Ovaltine, taken as a warm drink at bedtime, tends to draw excess blood away from the brain. Thus inviting mental calm and "conditioning" the mind for sleep.

Second: Ovaltine corrects digestive unrest by gently stimulating and aiding digestive processes.

Third: Ovaltine supplies important food elements, the absence of which, in ordinary diet, in time, leads to irritated nerves and sleeplessness.

As you continue to take Ovaltine, note the permanent benefits you obtain. Observe how quickly you fall asleep every night. See how resistance to fatigue is built up—how "staying power" multiplies.

Start tonight! Phone your druggist or grocer for a tin of Ovaltine now. Mix 2 to 4 teaspoonfuls in a cup of warm milk and drink it just before you go to bed. You'll sleep more soundly than you have, probably, in weeks and months—feel far fresher tomorrow.

If you prefer to try before buying, mail the coupon on this page for a trial supply.

NOTE: Thousands of nervous people, men and women, are using Ovaltine to restore vitality when fatigued. During the World War, medical authorities made it a standard ration for rebuilding shell-shocked, nerve-shattered soldiers. It is also highly recommended by physicians for nervous, underweight children—and as a strengthening food for nursing mothers, convalescents, and the aged.
